LOCAL CONTRACTOR GOES CRAZY... AND GIVES AWAY $42,000

(Mild weather creates opportunity for Suffolk County homeowners)

Forty-two local homeowners are able to buy a new Premier or Deluxe central air conditioner and heating system with no money down and $1,000 discount.

And it gets better.

If your air conditioner is over 10 years old you might be able to get a new air conditioner and furnace without taking a dime out of your pocket. More about this in a moment.

Right now you might be asking yourself "What's the catch? Otherwise, how can they be making and offer like this?"

This is no catch. But there is a special circumstance to explain... You see, several times a year we buy air conditioners "in bulk" instead of the "onesy, twosy" most other contractors do. And why do we do this? It's simple. We do it to give extra leverage when we go in to negotiate with the manufacturer into giving us lower prices.

OUR PROBLEM IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY

Because of the mild summer weather, we have 42 overstocked Premier and Deluxe air conditioners that must be moved out of inventory. And here is our problem. Most people only replace their old, and inefficient air conditioner after it breaks down! But, due to the mild weather people are not running their air conditioners so none are breaking down. So we had to create a program so financially advantageous...that homeowners with old air conditioners would come out ahead by replacing them before they broke down!

Another thing. These 42 air conditioners are brand new 2009 models. They are not seconds, blems or standard "builder" models. They have a full 5 year parts and labor warranty. And they qualify for the Federal Tax Credit which is 30% of the total cost or up to $1,500.

JUST THINK

If your air conditioner is over 10 years old the money you save on your electric bill could offset the monthly investment on your new system. It's almost like "having your cake and eating it too."

IRON CLAD GUARANTEE

We're so confident that you will save 20% or more on your cooling cost (we actually project more like 30-50%) that we will pay you DOUBLE THE DIFFERENCE if you don't the first year.

There's no way you can lose. If these systems weren't among the best on the market, we couldn't afford to make such a promise.

HERE'S HOW

Just call Tina at 631-823-3302 and she will set up an appointment for your free survey. A Comfort Advisor will come and measure your home to determine the proper size and explain this Special Get Rid Of Our Extra Air Conditioner Program.

Don't forget, we only have 42 air conditioners. When they are gone, this $1,000 discount offer also ends.

Give us a call now and thank you for reading this rather long ad. We hope you will profit greatly because of it.

Traffic Circle Downtown with Monument in the Center Will Do It

By Dan Rattiner

About two months ago, I got it into my head that downtown Bridgehampton ought to have all its electrical lines put underground, all its telephone poles removed and a traffic circle installed around the Bridgehampton War Memorial monument. If you did that, the lighting company would no longer be butchering the beautiful trees downtown to look like Raggedy Andy, because there would no longer be telephone and electric lines to cut them away from.

You'd have a downtown Bridgehampton to rival the great gems of the Hamptons, East Hampton, Southampton, Sag Harbor and Westhampton Beach. Bridgehampton would be stunning.

The idea came to me from four different perspectives. One is that Dan's Papers is based in Bridgehampton. Two is that downtown Bridgehampton is a classic old fashioned small town anchored in the center by a most beautiful white Presbyterian Church. Three is that I studied city planning at the Harvard Graduate School of Design and four is that this is perfectly plausible, except for the fact that a local developer has bought the northwest corner of the center of town and if he builds there, this may be impossible.

When I last wrote about this, all I knew was that the lease for the old wooden Bridgehampton Beverage building on that northwest corner was coming to an end in one year and a new landowner was thinking of tearing it down and developing it. And so the wheels started turning. I suggested that Southampton Town buy that northeast corner.

Since that time, I have gathered more information. The man who proposes to develop the northwest corner is Lenny Ackerman of East Hampton. More information is that years ago a traffic circle actually was proposed for the Bridgehampton monument. I have not tracked it down, but I think it came from the State would have to move forward with such a project if it went ahead, and she expressed interest in the idea. Tom Neely, the Southampton Town Transportation director, also expressed interest.

Bridgehampton has not had the fabulous history that the other villages out here have. It was founded in 1648, really just as a mail stop between East Hampton and Southampton. Its name came from the small bridge south of town that crosses over a portion of Sagg Pond so you can get between those two towns. From the beginning, it was just farms and a few boarding houses.

Numerous inns and taverns were built in the 1700s and 1800s. Wick's Inn, which played a role in the American Revolution as a gathering point for the local colonists, was built in the 1700s on the northwest corner of Main Street in the center of town. During the Revolution, the Bridgehampton Militia mustered in a field on the southwest corner. In the 1800s, the beautiful churches were built on Main Street to accommodate the growing local population and at that time two great homes, both inns, were built on the southeast and northeast corners of the center of town, known as Hampton House and the Bull's Head Inn, respectively. In the late 1800s, just to the west of Wick's Inn on Main Street, the grand brick and stone Bridgehampton Bank building was con-

Department of Transportation. The Montauk Highway all through the Hamptons is, as I am sure you know, owned by the State.

Also, I met about this with our State Assemblyman Fred Thiele, asking that he help find this plan, but so far he's not come up with it. I also spoke about the project with Anna Throne-Holst, who grew up in Bridgehampton and is on the Southampton Town Board, which

For $8, East End visitors can now snag a Hampton Star Map—and learn where celebrities like Jerry Seinfeld, Steven Spielberg and Gwyneth Paltrow call their homes away from home. Maps are available at Going Nuts in Southampton, Hampton Cards & Gifts in East Hampton and online soon at hampton-starmap.com.

Gwyneth Paltrow, Naomi Watts, Paul McCartney and Kate Capshaw Spielberg attended an invite-only reception two weeks ago at Stella McCartney's pop-up shop in East Hampton.

Paul Simon, Nicole Miller and other celebrity VIPs attended a party last week at art collector Neda Young's Sag Harbor home for artist Eric Fischl.

Singer Avril Lavigne partied at the AXE Lounge in Southampton recently.

The First Annual Ferrari Hamptons Rally kicked off in style. Founder Nathaniel Christian and Nikki Beach Midtown welcomed over $25 million worth of exotic toys, with Page Six editor, Richard Johnson, leading the inaugural drive through the Hamptons. Also in attendance were New York Jets player Kerry Rhodes and celebrity stylist Nole Marin.

After 23 showings in its first weekend for sale, Bernie Madoff's Montauk home reportedly received four offers. When it sells, Corcoran broker Joan Hegner will donate her commission to victims of Madoff's Ponzi scheme.

A federal judge dismissed cookbook author's Missy Chase Lapine's claims that East Hampton's Jessica Seinfeld stole her ideas for Deceptively Delicious: Simple Secrets to Get Your Kids Eating Good Food. Lapine may appeal, and will re-file defamation claims against Jerry Seinfeld for comments made on "The Late Show with David Letterman."

Congratulations, Michael J. Fox! The Quogue resident picked up a Creative Arts Award for Outstanding Guest Actor in a Drama for his appearances on "Rescue Me."

Hugh Grant was out and about in Southampton last week. After swinging by the Golden Pear for a coffee and muffin, he went to Keszler Gallery to check out a watercolor exhibit done by his father, James Grant.

Southampton socialite Tinsley Mortimer has been filming a reality show with Andrew Glassman, producer of "Average Joe" and "The Ex-Wives Club," among others.

Are the Amish Crafting a Miracle Heater that'll Save You Money?

By Dan Rattiner

For many years, I have had a space heater in the library of my home in East Hampton that is disguised to look like a Franklin Stove fireplace. It has a black iron frame and mantle with a glass door in the front that appears to be able to be opened. (It can't.) Behind the glass there is fake wood, some fluttery cellophane and a light that you turn on and off with a switch. When you turn it on, it shines on the fluttery stuff and makes it look like flames. The whole thing looks like a real fire. At the back, hidden away, there is an electric coil that glows hot when you turn a dial. The dial also turns on a fan inside that blows the heat into the room. And so, if you push this against a wall and don't look too closely, you might think there is a roaring fireplace in your room. It's neat.

Having owned this thing for maybe 10 years, I was really amused to see the other day a full page ad in Newsday for something that works the same way—coils, blower, lightbulb and fake flames—except that the sides and mantelpiece are made of wood by Amish workers and underneath it there are little wheels so you can roll it from room to room.

This full page ad in Newsday has been produced by a marketing genius, and my hat is off to him. Somehow, he gets you thinking that because hardworking Amish craftsmen have been teamed up with a Chinese invention, there has been created a product so advanced you can shut your thermostat down and heat your house amidst "flames" and beauty for almost nothing. Fortunately, the Amish are making these things as fast as they can. The demand is tremendous.

"Amish mantle and miracle invention help home heat bills hit rock bottom" is the headline.

"How it works: The HEAT SURGE miracle heater is a work of engineering genius from the China coast so advanced, you simply plug it into any standard outlet. It uses only about 8 cents of electricity an hour on the standard setting. Yet it produces up to an amazing 5,119 BTUs on the high setting."

Yup. That's what my heater does. The low setting is the light bulb and a whiff of heat. The high setting increases the fan speed and

WE DON'T WANT IT HERE, WE DON'T WANT IT THERE

By Dan Rattiner

For three years, everybody on the East End, including this newspaper, fought against the idea of locating a Liquefied Natural Gas (LNG) plant in Long Island Sound.

A company named Broadwater had proposed putting one there. It would have been 19 miles off the coast of Riverhead and 20 miles off the coast of Connecticut. It would be as big as a battleship and shaped like one. It would be anchored to the seabed and it would be a receiving station for ships from around the world that are carrying liquefied natural gas—liquefied so they could transport 600 times as much of it to North America as they could if they had to bring it as gas. The ships would dock by the barge, the liquid gas would be offloaded onto it, heated up and turned into propane and natural gas, put into pipes and then sent underwater to warehousing and bottling plants in Queens and Connecticut.

Of course, we wouldn't want this in our gentle, sailboat-filled Long Island Sound (forget the submarines and everything else) and of course, we wouldn't want this thing out there, a perfect target for terrorist attacks that could blow this thing to kingdom come, and of course, we wouldn't want it possibly blocking access to other boats that would be shooed off if they came near. Put the damn thing somewhere in the Atlantic Ocean, for heaven's sake, not in the gentle, calm waters of Long Island Sound.

In the end, thanks to an expensive escort in New Jersey who wiggled her tush for Governor Eliot Spitzer, resulting in his resignation and Lt. Gov. Paterson taking over, the dreaded LNG plant bullet was dodged. Governor Paterson had the final say. The answer was no. Take your battleship and put it in the Atlantic Ocean. Thank you girl.

Well, now a new group calling itself the structed, a two-story affair that soon became the largest bank on the East End, both physically and financially. Then, in 1898, the War Memorial monument, featuring the bronze eagle with its spread wings atop the obelisk, was placed at the five corners that come together in the center of town as a centerpiece for the community. Bridgehampton at the turn of that century was a beautiful community, indeed.

It did not stay that way for long. By the time I arrived here as a teenager in the 1950s and then 20 years later moved our offices to the Dan's Papers building at the other end of town, the downtown part of Bridgehampton was an architectural disaster. Fresh out of architectural school, I could hardly fail to notice this.

Wick's Tavern had been torn down and replaced by a gas station (which is now the Bridgehampton Beverage) on the northwest corner. Only a bronze sign remains to let us know it had ever been there. On the southwest corner, the Revolutionary War mustering grounds had become a row of shops. And both the Hampton House, the Greek Revival building from the 1860s and the Bull's Head Inn, another Greek Revival structure, were both falling to ruin. Hampton House actually had a gas station firmly planted on its front lawn. A traffic light now hovered over the monument. And finally, since 1910, the utilities company had installed telephone and electrical wires on telephone poles all along Main Street. Bridgehampton was and is the only downtown east of the Shinnecock Canal to suffer this indignity.

As for the rest of Main Street, which was now spreading along the road west of the monument, it was dominated by four beautiful churches, but also six gas stations. When a proposal arrived from the Sunoco Oil Company in 1969 to tear down the Bull's Head Inn and put a seventh gas station there, I led a campaign in Dan's Papers to halt that project. Had that not succeeded, we would have had to look out at gas stations on three of the four corners facing the Monument. The proposal evaporated. After that, a Bridgehampton man named Lynn St. John bought the place, fixed it up, and has owned it ever since. It was this close call, however, that made me really see how Bridgehampton was being passed over in the grooming of all the other downtowns on the East End.

Today, a new Bridgehampton Bank building, five times larger than the grand old building, anchors the west end of downtown. The old bank building is now a Starbucks. Also, just two years ago, the Town bought the Hampton Inn across from the Bull's Head Inn and first thing bulldozed the gas station off the front lawn. It is today in the process of being restored. As for the Bridgehampton Militia mustering grounds, there is really nothing to be done. The Town did, however, buy a half-acre lot facing out on Ocean Road behind the row of stores there, and it has made it into a small park, Militia Park, with benches and its own small monument in the center honoring that famous Revolutionary War

The concept of a traffic circle on eastern Long Island is far from new. The State has built them all over and they work very well.

Traffic lights are gone. Flowers and gardens grace their centers. There are traffic circles in Riverhead, at Twelve Corners in Westhampton Beach, at Ferry Road and Long Beach Road in North Haven and on Scuttlehole Road and Mitchell Lane, about two miles up into the farm fields north of town. Another has been proposed for downtown Sag Harbor, by Long Wharf. Traffic is a terrible mess there. A circle would solve the problem, but the village trustees are not quite willing to agree to let that happen yet.

It is easy to remember everything the way it was, or the way it is, and state the opinion that our town is just fine. So I have Google Earthed downtown Bridgehampton and I present it at the top of this article, overlaid with the Google Earth traffic circle at the same scale as the traffic circle in Riverhead.

This is a pretty big traffic circle, the one in Riverhead, probably the biggest of any of them, except perhaps for the one at Twelve Corners in Westhampton Beach. Bigger traffic circles are grander than smaller ones, and I think that downtown Bridgehampton deserves a grand one. The monument, of course, would go in the center and the traffic light above it would come down.

As near as I can figure by working with these overlays, I've concluded that my initial premise was correct—that you can't do it without condemning the old Bridgehampton Beverage building. It would also be necessary to take down a small wooden building facing Lumber Lane on this piece of property, a building that is currently not in use, but was recently the Robbins Wolfe catering company.

Working on this project, I have jiggled the overlay of the Riverhead traffic circle around on the Google Earth of the center of Town, and if you don't condemn this northwest corner, you have to cut into the front lawn of the Hampton House diagonally opposite it to make the circle work. I thought that was not so good. I also thought that it would not be so good to have a smaller traffic circle there. One would fit, but it would be rather modest and not in keeping with our wonderful Town.

The monument itself, by the way, would have to be moved about 10 feet to be in the very center of the traffic circle. But it seemed to me there is nothing sacred about where it is now. And it can be moved. A Toyota driven by an impaired driver confirmed this about five years ago one midnight by banging into it and jarring it about 18 inches. No problem.

Wouldn't the Town be beautiful with all these improvements? The condemnation would cost the Town money, which it does not have right now. I did talk to Ackerman, because the Town would not be in a position to do this for several years anyway, and he said he's got a plan for a row of stores for that northeast corner ready to go to the Planning Board, but the approvals are in any case several years away. He said he could delay things if the Town expressed an interest.

"It also," he said, "comes down to money and how much the Town could pay. It would need to be worth it. But I could work with them to make this happen."

Hi There!

Sag Harbor Merchants, Mom & Pops All, Welcome You to Town

By Dan Rattiner

I was in the HarborFest Parade that went down Main Street in Sag Harbor on Saturday morning. Bob Edelman and I were in the Dan's Papers Smart Car and we were preceded by a lot of the staff carrying the Dan's Papers banner. In front of us was an Old Model T promoting a local bank. Behind us was a gaggle of motorcycle riders in formation from an outfit called the Sag Harbor Hysterical Society promoting, well, older guys on motorcycles.

It was among the shortest parades I've ever been in. There was one band, five floats, some fire trucks and ambulances and if you bent over to tie your shoes, you might have missed it. But it was a hell of a lot of fun, and at nine a.m. it kicked off the 45th annual Sag Harbor HarborFest weekend with a big bang.

Because Main Street was mostly cleared of cars for the parade and because we came down the middle of the street, I got to see Sag Harbor from a perspective I have not usually enjoyed. Sag Harbor, seen while slowly moving down the white line in the middle of the street is, besides a great collection of old commercial buildings, a great tribute to the steadfastness of the citizens of that Village. Sag Harbor has successfully fended off the gentrification that has transformed all the other Hamptons towns. If you drive down the white line in any other town in the Hamptons (and I do not advise it) the store signs read Gucci. Tiffany, Polo and Cartier. In Sag Harbor, the signage reads Schiavoni's Market, Sag Harbor Launderette, the Emporium Hardware and Marty's Barbershop. How they have fended off cutsie and glitzy I do not know, but they have. And they remain forever vigilant. A current plan to put a new shopping center at 1 Ferry Road right by Long Wharf is the object of vigorous opposition. It's also an undefeated opposition. Sag Harbor has yet to have a chain store or a shopping center. That's just the way it is.

Walking down Main Street on the west side, spending time on Long Wharf where the farmer's market and the booths for the festival were, then walking up the east side of Main Street, it's possible to see not only the hordes of locals, summerpeople and tourists who love to come here and not only the scads of posters advertising everything from Bay Street Theatre to a Fishing Tournment, to an Old Fashioned Lobster Bake—sending a kid out with a bunch of posters means 100 posters getting up on every store in town—but signs the merchants themselves have put on their front doors.

I am not talking about the No Dogs Allowed

THE PEOPLE WERE HERE. WHERE WAS THE MONEY?

By Dan Rattiner

If anyone doubts there has been a real sea change in the Hamptons this summer, consider these statistics.

In East Hampton, to park in any of the down-town lots, you approach a vending machine, press a button and get a free ticket not much larger than a postage stamp to put on the top of your dashboard. The tickets are date and time stamped, so parking lot police people can see by just looking through the windshield who has overstayed the limit and who has not.

Wouldn't you think the number of such tickets coming from these vending machines would be less this year than last? They are virtually the same. Last year, with excellent weather, there were 355,000 tickets given out during June, July and August.

Meanwhile, sitting in the center of Town in her Chamber of Commerce office is Marina Van, who watches it all. She knows the merchants and hears what they say. She doesn't have any hard numbers but she said this to me. "My gut instinct is that business was off 20% this summer."

That is retail business. As for real estate business, the numbers in all the Hamptons show a drop of almost 40% in the number of transactions and almost 70% in the cash value of the transactions. As for the rental business, most realtors say that the number of rentals was off 20% when all was said and done, while the cost of a rental dropped about 30%. There were big bargains.

Here are some other statistics to contemplate, now that we are gathering them up.

The ridership on the Hampton Jitney was up considerably this summer. You could not only see the increase in the number of busses and the number of people on the busses, but this is also according to Geoff Lynch, the CEO of the

63 Years of Tradition

Shinnecocks Celebrate: Powwow & Record-Breaking Crowds

By Aline Reynolds

On Labor Day weekend, visitors from all over the tri-state area flocked to the Shinnecock reservation, just west of Southampton Village, to cheer on native dancers, feast on Indian tacos, and listen to indigenous drum beats. They came for the 63rd annual powwow, hosted by the Shinnecocks in celebration of their cherished Native American culture.

Attendance was strong during the four days of the powwow. The average attendance for powwow weekend is from 40,000 to 50,000. While the Nation doesn't release attendance numbers, Lance Gumbs, co-chair of the event said that crowds on Sunday probably broke the single-day attendance record for the powwow's history. Ironically, the recession may have contributed to this year's success, since the $12 adult entrance fees attracted many who were trimming their play budgets by not splurging on exorbitant vacations.

The main attraction at the powwow was a raised platform on which Native Americans—men, women and children of all ages—danced, group after group, to a steady drumbeat accompanied by native songs. Each group was evaluated by judges who awarded prizes for the performances. Around the platform stood hundreds of spectators, welcomed by dancers adorned in

LOCAL POLITICS: THE AGONY AND THE ECSTASY

By T.J. Clemente

For the Democratic Parties of Southampton and East Hampton, it's Charles Dickens deluxe—the best of times, the worst of times.

In Southampton, the drum beat seems to be for the candidacy of incumbent Town Board Member Anna Throne-Holst in her quest to dislodge the Republican stronghold on the Southampton's Supervisor's office. Recent events have only bolstered the possibility of her winning. Incumbent Republican Linda Kabot has been holding the wrong kind of press conferences lately, trying to do damage control after being stopped by Westhampton Beach police officer for what he deemed erratic driving perhaps due to alcohol consumption. This of course has nothing to do with how Southampton will wrestle with the financial shortfalls to cover Town expenditures moving forward. But ThroneHolst, a schooled fiscal expert, seems to be lasering in on this issue and is getting great traction with voters. With just seven weeks until the elections, the gavel of power that comes with the Town supervisor position could actually pass to the Democrats for the first time in a long time.

In East Hampton things are quite different. The news is not how the present supervisor will close the gap on the town's budget deficit, but of when he will be arrested, go to jail, and for how long? The beleaguered supervisor, Bill McGintee, was already asked not to seek re-election. There's no doubt his presence is being felt negatively by Ben Zwirn, the Democratic candidate chosen to seek office. Zwirn is accumulating numerous endorsements including that of the well respected Greg Ferraris, former mayor of Sag Harbor. But Zwirn has the burden of McGintee's legacy, and must explain why he insisted that no incumbent Democratic Town Board run for re-election. Ouch.

As long as William Wilkinson, Republican candidate for East Hampton Town Supervisor, stays out of Westhampton Beach after midnight in his car, his election seems like a very sure bet. Many in town believe he should have won the last election, but due to some possible blatant misrepresentations by McGintee about the state of town finances, Wilkinson lost by less than 200 votes. The bumper sticker, "Don't Blame Me I Voted for Wilkinson," on many cars sums up a situation that even a decent hard working Ben Zwirn may not be able to overcome. The Democratic Party will have to shoulder some blame for being at the reins of the worst economic meltdown, perhaps in the Town's very long histo-signs or the No Public Rest Rooms signs. Those are the ordinary signs. I am talking about heartfelt and extraordinary signs that you might not see in any other town in the Hamptons or even any other town in America. The merchants are so proud to be here. They are so proud to be local stores with mom and pop owners and they are so proud of the support being offered them by the townspeople that, well, here is a tour of the signage that I found, walking down the west side of Main Street, back up the east side to Madison, then crossing over to Fisher's Home Furnishings and calling it a day! I was stopped many times on this walk, mostly by people who are, simply speaking, fans of Dan's Papers. It took two hours.

The Ideal Store, which sells newspapers, magazines and greeting cards, has a sign on the door that reads PETS MAY ENTER IF CARRIED OR CONTROLLED ON A SHORT LEASH.

Marty's Barber Shop has a sign that reads SORRY I CAN'T HANDLE KIDS. He also has a sign in his window that reads MARTY'S RULES FOR A LONG AND HAPPY LIFE: 1. HELP OTHER PEOPLE, 2. DO GOOD THINGS, 3. BE KIND

Bikehampton has a practical sort of sign on its front door. PLEASE DON'T BRING BIKES IN NEED OF REPAIR THROUGH THE STORE. USE REAR ENTRANCE.

The Sag Harbor Launderette has a sign that reads ASK AT THE COUNTER HOW WE CAN MAKE YOUR EVERY OCCASION SHOPPING SO MUCH EASIER WITH A WELL DESERVED GIFT CERTIFICATE.

These are friendly signs.

One of my favorites on the west side was at Lee's Jewelry, which has inside eight glass show-cases of valuable jewels. It read BACK IN 5 MIN-UTES. But the door was wide open. It made me consider what a burglar might think of this. But then a burglar might be taken aback by the just five minutes business. How close to the end of the five minutes were they?

On the east side of the street, Andrew & Co. has a sign that reads NO FOOD OR GOOEY THINGS.

And Satori requests PLEASE LIMIT YOUR PHONE CONVERSATIONS.

Fisher's, in the middle of this busy day, had two signs one on top of the other that gave out the mangled information CLOSED 7 DAYS 10-5. None of these are the sort of sign you might find at Brooks Brothers or Saks Fifth Avenue or one of the other polished establishments in the other Hamptons.

Personally, because I love this stuff, I have to tell you I miss a sign that used to be on the Sag Harbor Bridgehampton Turnpike as you drove north heading into the outskirts of Sag Harbor Village.

There were two signs, one above the other. The first sign, in the summertime, read SAG HARBOR on top and VISIT OUR WHALING MUSE-UM on the bottom. But in the six months of winter, when the Whaling Museum was closed, they'd take down the VISIT OUR WHALING MUSEUM sign and replace it with the word CLOSED.

Try that real fast. You're driving along. The sign says SAG HARBOR CLOSED, six months a year. And it was like that for 30 years and just nobody gave a damn for the longest time.

Sag Harbor has some of the most imaginatively named stores in the Hamptons. The Paradise Café. Fingers Fine Haircutting. Simpatico Shoe Store. Big Olaf. Metaphysical Books and Tools. Blue Sky. The Cigar Bar. Provisions. And the ideally named Ideal.

I'd say more than half the stores in town have been there for a generation. Some have even been there for 100 years or more.

As you can tell, I'm a big fan of Sag Harbor. Something I hope never goes away are the battered and well worn 1940s era metal horse and kiddy cars in front of the 5 & 10 Variety Story that, for a quarter, will bounce your little kid gently up and down for a minute or two. In an age of $10 million homes, who would believe the Hamptons still has a 5 & 10 Variety Store? Who would believe there are rides you can put your kids on for a quarter?

Long live Sag Harbor. I'm against any big box stores, shopping malls, chain stores or Madison Avenue galleries that want to set up shop in this town. Sag Harbor is celebrating what it once was and what America once was.

As far as helping block big business from coming in, do you think these sweet notices on all the doors might deter them? Maybe we ought to have more of these notices. Perhaps the merchants of Sag Harbor, reading this and thinking the same thing, will now put more sweet and friendly notes on their front doors. Each little bit will help. Maybe we ought to have a contest.

Free Event Offers Support, Information, Hope

By Tiffany Razzano

Year round, Fighting Chance offers free emotional and educational support to East End residents who are diagnosed with cancer. Now, the Sag Harbor-based non-profit group will offer additional support on Saturday, Sept. 26, with its biannual Day of Hope symposium.

The event will give cancer patients opportunities to meet others fighting the disease and learn about new and innovative treatments. On hand will be several nationally acclaimed oncologists from medical centers including Memorial Sloan-Kettering, Stony Brook University Hospital and Southampton Hospital, that are on top of cutting edge developments in cancer treatment. Registration isn't required for this free event at Bay Street Theatre, but it is encouraged. And, said founder Darren Darrow, he hates to turn people away at the door.

"Cancer is such an isolating disease," he said.
"Just 20 years ago people would whisper about it. People would stop going to work and might suffer some kind of physical disfigurement.

Probably every person is wearing a wig. There's nothing to be embarrassed about. It's an inspiration." Such an event can help forge tremendous friendships, he said, as people learn that they're not alone.

In addition to patients, Darrow said East End oncologists are also isolated—from advancements in treatment. Chemical trials are being run at places like Memorial Sloan Kettering. "In a rural area, an oncologist might not hear about developments until three or four years later," he said.

Oncologists from the NY metro area will speak on advancements in areas like surgery, drugs and radiation. "People come out encouraged from these events, knowing there are breakthroughs they can take advantage of soon, if not now," he said. "Cancer patients will leave knowing probably more than their doctors."

Don Garrity, the chief nutritionist from Sloan Kettering, will speak about the importance of nutrition—critical to care and self-empowering for cancer patients. Perry Duryea, a cancer survivor from Montauk, will speak about his experiences. "People want to hear about survivors," Darrow said.

Darrow founded Fighting Chance in 2001 after his mother was diagnosed with cancer and passed away just 100 days later. Faced with being her primary caregiver, he felt completely unprepared. Back then, when he asked at Southampton Hospital if there was information available to help him, he said he was told, "No, but here's a number to a cab company. You're going to be driving a lot." (Things have changed significantly since then at the Hospital, which will have representatives at the event.)

Fighting Chance was created as a resource guide, called "Coping with Cancer on the East End"—essentially a Yellow Pages for things people with cancer might need, from a list of pharmacies, to where to find a wheelchair, to where get] a second opinion. The free guide is available in print and online at fightingchance.com.

The organization now offers free individual counseling with a professional therapist, as well as concierges who will help with anything a patient might need, and support groups. About 1,000 people on the East End are diagnosed with cancer each year, Darrow said. "And approximately 500 of them call us within 24 hours of being diagnosed," compared to 50 or 100 when the group first started out.

Obama Spurs Mixed Messages—from Parents

By Susan M. Galardi

Respect your elders.

Question authority.

These were probably the most profound messages that informed my life growing up in the '60s. Two contradictory messages. But at least they came in sequence.

The second one didn't really kick in until I was a teenager—the perfect time for a new mission statement. The first was the driving principle of my earlier life (particularly as a student in Catholic school). Unconditional respect was to be given to parents, aunts, uncles, nuns, priests, teachers—and even presidents.

But apparently, that edict has been totally disregarded recently in some schools around the country, and unfortunately, at least one here on the East End

Last week, Thomas Lamorgese, the principal at the East Hampton Middle School, was pressured by some parents in the school to refrain from showing President Obama's education message to students. At least a dozen parents let him know in no uncertain terms that they did not want their children to be exposed to the speech.

Some claimed they saw the message as a sheer political move—of course, the leader of our country encouraging children to do their best, stay in school, and take responsibility for their education is a highly partisan issue. Others feared Obama's "socialist" views might rub off on their kids, or that he would veer off into the heated health care issue. And they were right. Obama went right for the jugular, trying to brainwash children with his health care plan. He had the nerve to suggest that kids wash their hands a lot and stay home when they're sick. These politicians never pass on an opportunity to further their own agendas, do they?

In any case, Lamorgese sent out an email that was intercepted and leaked to the press. In it, he said, "Hi all. As President Obama's speech has generated so much controversy, please have it recorded and it can be shown at a later date as appropriate."

Some people read this to mean Lamorgese was saying the contents of the speech were controversial. Others, including East Hampton School superintendent Ray Gaultieri, said the principal was referring to the controversy among the parents. Still others in the school district who know Lamorgese, said that he supports Obama, and would never impose his own views on students. A further opionion was that Lamorgese was simply cow towing to pressures from conservative parents

Lamorgese said the speech's scheduled air time—noon on Tuesday, the first day of school during lunch hour—was awkward so he simply decided to record the speech to show when it was more convenient (it was shown the next day). He also said he regularly previews films that might be controversial.

This part of the rationale sounded dissonant. A presidential speech to schoolchildren isn't a movie with a PG rating that needs to be reviewed for bad language or violent scenes. (Could you imagine schools taping JFK's inaugural address to review for a later showing?) It's not like Obama has a history of switch-pitching

Jay McInerney and screenwriter Bill Collage were trying to talk very loudly to be heard by one another as the subway came squealing around the Trout Pond bend between Noyac and Sag Harbor, but we couldn't hear what they were saying either, except it was something about a new movie.

GOVERNOR PATTERSON RELENTS, ORDERS HAMPTON SUBWAY REOPENED

Two hundred angry Hampton Subway riders went to Albany last Wednesday to protest against the Governor's order closing it due to graft and incompetence. The plan was to demonstrate at the Albany Subway System and clog it with demonstrators at the entrances as to close it down too.

When they got there, however, they found that there is no Albany Subway, so they charged over to the State House to demonstrate in the driveway by the entrance there.

Eventually, Governor David Paterson, who was holed up inside, issued a directive, ordering the Hampton Subway reopened on a temporary basis until legislation can make its way through the State Legislature that he will sign allowing the State of New York to take it over.

"The graft and theft, bungling ineptness and nepotism on this system are beyond belief and until we can take it over, I will just have to close my eyes to it," he said.

Albany insiders say that considering Albany politics, this proposed legislation should make it to the Governor's desk around 2021

COMMISSIONER ASPINALL RECEIVES AWARD

A large bronze trophy was presented to our Hampton Subway Commissioner Bill Aspinall by the United States Subway Safety Board (USSSB) last Thursday. The USSSB gives this annual award for the safest subway in America. Aspinall received the award on behalf of Hampton Subway in Aspen, where the USSSB is headquartered, at its annual dinner convention. He is the first winner of this annual award. The award was presented to him by Biff Aspinall, the CEO and chairman of USSSB, who also just happens to be the brother of the Commissioner.

COMMISSIONER ASPINALL'S MESSAGE

It is a pleasure to be the recipient of a major award here in Aspen given out by a major subway organization concerned with public safety. Hampton Subway has moved nearly a million riders entirely without anybody dying because of the subway ride since the beginning of the year. Oh, we've had a few people who did, but in every case, they were old and it was from natural causes and not because of the subway ride.

My congratulations go out to our faithful riders and their families - who often can be seen on platforms waving goodbye to our riders - who on their own, got together and pooled their resources to hire 5 busses to take them up to Albany to demonstrate and break the logjam and back of those keeping the Hampton Subway closed for the busy Labor Day weekend. I would have been there myself, except that I had to be in Aspen for this damn award. Major public personalities were expected here for the occasion and so the date of it could not be changed. Those expected included President Obama and Mexican President Felipe Caldéron, along with Academy Award nominee Alec Baldwin and the new tennis sensation Melanie Oudin, though in the end, bad weather forced them all not to be able to get here in time. I was told

Philadelphia rapper Azizz recently made his Hampton debut and helped bring the 2009 summer season to a close when he performed live at Southampton's Pink Elephant. Axe Lounge Labor Day weekend was packed wall to wall. Sunday night was the last "Club Night" of the season. Several VIPs let loose: Richard Kubick, Tommy and Chrissy Hughes, Marc Simon, Alissa Grad, Elizabeth Arden's NYC Red Door Salon dream team—star colorist "HOLLYWOOD" a.k.a. Holly Bromberg and celebrity hair stylist Jasmine Galazka—PR exec Amanda Mitchell and even celebrity photographer Lisa C. Wagner.

There's still one fashion show you can experience at Guild Hall in East Hampton: "The Art of Fashion in the Hamptons," featuring several world-renown American fashion designers who are Long Island residents. The handpicked team was asked to create a vignette that reveals their design inspiration for "Hamptons Fashion." Calvin Klein told me, "It's a reflection of the clothes and the Hampton's, that's really the key," he said. Power couple, Elie Tahari and his wife, Rory (VP of the brand), admitted, "We wanted to do a small vignette of our home to have everybody have that feeling of what it's like to be in the Hamptons." What about this coming season's fall must haves? Donna Karan exclaimed, "Lots of cashmere if it gets cold!" Vera Wang revealed, "Lots of really warm fabulous sweaters and great boots!" Nicole Miller shared, "I did a lot of origami dresses and pleated dresses!" Betsey Johnson said, "There's no real tread! Its Victorian ruffles and bouffants over sequent leggings!" The "Art of Fashion" is on at Guild Hall through Oct. 12.

Southampton Historical Museum is hosting the official "Calendar Girls Opening Reception," from 5-7 p.m. at the Mark Humphrey Gallery. Some Museum trustees and volunteers decided to aid the Museum's capital campaign by posing for a provocative calendar "scantily clad." Meet the "pin-up" girls and have them autograph your limited edition for $14.95. You may catch a glimpse of your favorite "month" milling about town, possibly getting coiffed at the Kevin Maple Salon by the dedicated duo celebrity hair stylist Gerard Touroul and make-up artist to the stars Erin McNeill, who donated their services to the cause. Pigeon transfers data faster than South Africa's Telkom. Thurs., Sept. 10, 5:05 pm ET JOHANNESBURG (Reuters). A South African technology company proved it was faster for them to transmit data with a carrier pigeon than to send it using Telkom, the country's leading internet service provider.

Internet speed and connectivity in Africa's largest economy are poor because of a bandwidth shortage. Local news agency SAPA reported the 11-month-old pigeon, Winston, took 68 minutes to fly 50 miles from Unlimited IT's offices near Pietermaritzburg to the coastal city of Durban with a data card was strapped to his leg. Including downloading, the transfer took two hours, six minutes, and 57 seconds; the time it took for only 4% of the data to be transferred using a Telkom line. Unlimited IT performed the stunt after becoming frustrated with slow internet transmission times. Telkom could not immediately be reached for comment.

Is it time for Dan's to greener and pioneer a new way to blend old and new technology? Dan goes everywhere. He writes from everywhere. I bet he can't always get the internet connection he needs to send in reports. He could start a whole new trend, and being Dan, others would follow his example.

At a Hampton horse event:

"Who's the man with the hat and a pigeon?"

"That's Dan Rattiner from Dan's Papers."
"Is be denoting the hird? In it a secrifice?"

"Is he donating the bird? Is it a sacrifice?"

"Dan can't always get his wireless internet to transmit his articles from his laptop out here in the wild. He writes things right out here in the field—a real pioneer. So now he brings one of his Dan's Papers Higher Flyers pigeons with him to these events. The pigeons have a little suitcase attached by Velcro to one ankle. Dan puts in his memory card in and releases the bird. His office gets the bird in five to eight minutes. He has two birds he likes to use, Samson and Delilah. I think he brought Delilah today. We'll know if he gives her Perrier water in her little cup, she's a Hampton born pigeon, only drinks Perrier."

"What does Samson drink?"

"Well, I heard that Dan just found out that Samson has a bit of a drinking problem. Birds love alcohol. Samson got a sip from somebody's Appletini at the last event and delivered Dan's card to Martha Stewart's house. Fortunately, Martha is trying out this green transfer concept and sent a new bird to Dan's office. Then she got Samson into a new little aviary rehab, The Pickled Pigeon. It's very private. She decorated the facility herself. It has a nice park and statue theme, very tasteful, and no cat statues."

"Yeah, I can see where that would mess with a bird's brain."

"Definitely, you don't want to have the DT's around images of things that can eat you."

"So where do you buy these birds?"

"East Hampton store, Feathers Go Farther; Giving the Bird From Manhattan to Montauk."

Burning more than oil to heat your home?

If your oil-fired furnace or boiler is over ten years old, it will probably waste $600 to $1000 next season!

Recent improvements in oil heating technology have made oil heating much less costly. Today's equipment burns 25-35% less oil each season. With future oil prices probably rising, heating system upgrades can return the investment through lower oil bills quickly.

Once installed, a new heating system will work dependably for 20 years or more, saving money on oil every year, while lowering repair and maintenance costs. Call the experts at Quogue Sinclair today for a FREE estimate of your savings!

colorful regalia featuring intricate patterns of leather, ribbons, beads and feathers. Over 100 vendors sold everything from leather goods to native dishes like baked clams and tacos on the outskirts of the performance grounds.

The down-to-earth powwow relates more to the natural beauty and history of the Hamptons than to the glitz and glamour also associated with the area, the Indians explained. "This is more of what people think of when they think of spending a summer in the Hamptons—coming to the powwow at the end of the summer," 28-year-old Shinnecock Indian Toria Eleazer said. Born and raised in Shinnecock, Eleazer has been coming to her nation's powwow since childhood.

Gumbs explained how the Shinnecock powwow has developed over the last 60-plus years—from a small social gathering with exclusively traditional dances to a mixture of older and more contemporary performances. Like most Shinnecocks, he has been attending powwows since early childhood. Gumbs remembers taking his very first dance steps as a youngster guided by Iroquois Indian Tom Two Arrows (Thomas Dorsey) at a Cape Cod powwow.

His mother, 88-year-old Harriet Gumbs, also fondly remembers the more intimate powwows of the past, when dozens of fellow Native Americans would come knocking on her door, asking to stay over for the weekend at her home on the reservation. She would never turn them away, she said, since that's what the powwow was all about—sharing rooms and memories.

Gumbs remarked on how she has witnessed children growing up and having their own families. "Every single one of them come around and say, I want you to meet my little boy. I was a little boy his age when I first came.' It's a real thrill," she said.

The powwow also introduces outsiders to Indian traditions and gives visitors the chance to overcome false preconceptions of the natives. "A lot of people are ill-informed. The stereotypes are pervasive," Chief Eaglespirit said. "The powwow lets you actually sit down and talk with a Native American."

Yvette Alves, 50, commented on some peoples' misunderstanding of Native American culture. "A lot of people come to the powwows and still have the perception that everyone is running around half-clothed," said. "This way people will learn that we have jobs, cars, cell phones, businesses, common as well as traditional clothing."

Chief Warhawk Harry Williams, 85, who delivered the welcome address on Saturday, Sunday and Monday, reflected on the good ol' days when the powwow was a truly communal ritual, unspoiled by financial motives. "I was raised being taught and told that we were Indians. We lived among a loving community of elders and grew up together in our little one-room school house on the reservation," he said, emotionally. In the old days, he explained, Boy Scouts and other community members would volunteer their help in preparing the powwow. Williams pointed out that, these days, "no one moves without being paid."

Because of its popularity, the annual Shinnecock celebration is one of the few powwows in the country that has been able to run on its own profits, Gumbs said. Fred Bess, vice chairman of the Shinnecock board of trustees, said that the powwow committee is already brainstorming for next year, hoping to get additional outside support. The tribe will specifically targeting corporations for sponsorships.

Right now, the Shinnecocks feel financially squeezed—since they're not yet federally recognized, they don't qualify for government funding. The plan for a casino, which has been tossed around for six years, could very well materialize in a few months. The Shinnecocks are eagerly awaiting the December 15 announcement of their nation's federal recognition from the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs. The 1,000-member Shinnecock tribe would then join 564 othernational tribes were they to gain the federal recognition that has eluded them for decades. The Shinnecocks feel that official recognition is long overdue, since they have been soliciting it since the late 1970s.

If the government officially recognizes the tribe, the Shinnecock Nation will then begin negotiations with state legislators to finalize the development plan of the game facility. If all goes well, Bess said, the Shinnecock-run casino on their 800-acre reservation—or in the Aqueduct racetrack in Queens, an alternative location under discussion—could be up and running 18 months after construction begins.

"We want to be good neighbors," Bess said. "We want to have a facility that's good for the state of New York, for our people and for the community." It would also bolster the Shinnecocks economically at a time when tribal leaders are tightening their belts. Though a casino would be expensive to build and maintain, it would almost certainly provide a financial windfall for the tribe.

Whether or not the casino becomes a reality, the powwow proved that the Shinnecock Indian Nation is still a vital presence on the East End. "A lot of people think that, after all the wars and the moving-in of Europeans to this continent, that we've just been pushed right off into the Pacific," Alves said. "The powwow is to let them know that we're still here."

Americans—especially children—by promising to talk about one issue then betraying us all by discussing another.

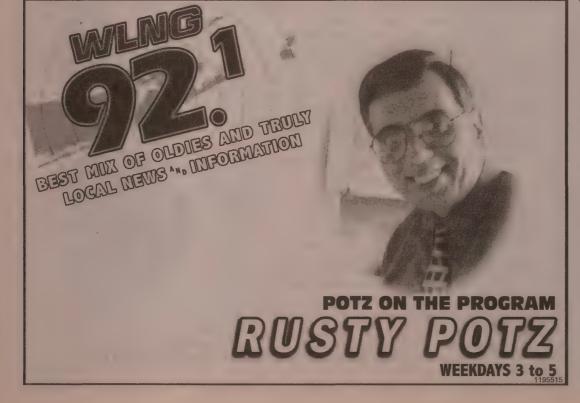

The almost 18-minute-long speech (probably its only fault—the length) focused on what is expected of students: taking responsibility for one's education, using the opportunities provided by school to determine what you're "good at," and developing that talent to the service of your country and fellow Americans. Obama told kids that if you quit on school, "you're not only quitting on yourself, you're quitting on your country," adding, "there's no excuse for not trying."

Anyone who's heard the President's message would be hard pressed to find anything controversial in it. Even Laura Bush and Newt Gingrich endorsed it. So what was the real issue? Surely not the message. Must've been the messenger.

Which brings me back to the mantras of my youth. The parents who prohibited their kids from watching the speech, those who chose instead to have their children separated from their peers, putting them in an embarrassing situation, are sending those kids that same mixed message: respect your elders (e.g.: us); question authority—that is, the leader of our country, not to mention your principal and teachers.

Telling children that it's okay to ignore the suggestions of the very school their parents chose for them is at the least, tremendously confusing – e.g.: "We want you to go to this school, but we don't like what they're doing." And teaching them that it's okay to disrespect the president? That's just un-American—something you'd expect from those flag-burning leftist hippies of my generation.

But at best, maybe those contradictory teachings will create a questioning mind in a child, who might learn to actually think for himself and question everything and everyone. Sounds pretty radical.

BUSINESS

By T.J. Clemente

At a recent wedding the father of the groom gave a short speech. Saying how lovely the bride looked and how wonderful her family is, he turned to his son and said he and the boy's mother had have 39 blissful years of marriage, and the reason for the success of the marriage, the advice he had for his son at this important moment, "Always have a top notch cleaning service to be your wife's wife!"

And in this pearl of wisdom is perhaps the secret behind Teresa Ward's Teresa's Family Cleaning, Inc. What once was the diligent work of one self professed, "compulsive cleaner," has grown into a small army of over 37 employees doing over $1.19 million in sales. The company is now a diversified business covering over 60 homes and commercial sites each day. The saying in business is, "The army is only as good as its general," and Ward, who lives in Rocky Point, set the bar very high. One of her former clients, a Patchogue working mom who employed Ward years back, said fondly, "My husband gave her cleaning job more compliments than he gave me. I was jealous but he was right, she was that thorough." Ward started her business in 1992 and now has her husband Kevin Ward, totally involved in growing the business to deal with these challenging times. They are aiming at commercial enterprise, or as he reportedly said, we "sort of diversified away from residential cleaning. We now do some niche commercial work, of boutiques and small shops."

Perhaps due to their ability to utilize the expertise of the Small Business Development Center at Stony Brook University to fine tune their business model and reorganize Teresa's Family Cleaning Inc., Teresa Ward was recognized by President Obama and New York State as Small Business Person of the Year at the White House where all the winners were gathered. There she listened to an address by both President Obama and Karen Mills of the Small Business Administration's (SBA) national office.

The very humble Ward reportedly believed that perhaps a salient reason for her selection was her creation of the New York Chapter of Cleaning for a Reason Foundation, which she dedicated to her beloved sister who passed away from cancer five years ago. One of the main servthat they were very disappointed to not be able to come until later when, of course, it was all over.

I am taking the opportunity while in this neck of the woods to get a well-needed vacation, and so I am writing this in Squaw Valley, where I expect to be for the next two weeks with my faithful secretary Ramone. Expect me back two weeks from Thursday.

Local Small Business Owner Honored

ices of the foundation is to locate and assist cancer patients by offering to come to their homes and give them a topnotch cleanup without charge. Over the last few years, Cleaning for a Reason Foundation has grown from eight dedicated companies to over 150 nationally.

In Suffolk County at Stony Brook University, the SBA along with participation from New York State operates a Small Business Development Center that helps small businesses secure low interest SBA loans and procure government contracts via GSA bidding. It also provides consultation to help small businesses readjust or create business plans. There are 24 offices across the state, serving over 290,000 small businesses.

The help is free.

There, Teresa and Kevin Ward received the expert advice to grow their company. Their wisdom to seek the help of the pros contributed to the success of Teresa's Family Cleaning, Inc. But the Patchogue client thinks it goes beyond that. "Teresa gave you her best, she was always on time, always smiled, and did one heck of a job," she said. "I'm sure she trained her employees to do the same, and her rates were reasonable."

Commenting on both the nature of their business and his wife's award, Kevin Ward reportedly said, "House cleaning isn't a cutting edge technology industry. It's good to see that an old grass roots, mom and pop business can win an award."

At the police station, the summer's activity was also down. There were fewer calls for service, fewer felonies, fewer cases that needed investigation, fewer accidents. The drop in crime seemed to be about 5% compared to last summer. People seemed to be more law abiding, more polite.

Nobody was killed on the highways this year. Two people were last summer. The only numbers that went up involved cars being towed. They went up by almost 20%, largely, it is believed, because this year the Village has more sophisticated devices to detect cars that have license plates that have lapsed insurance, either currently or anytime in the past. These they tow.

Air charters were off. Helicopter charters were way off. The Town reports there were fewer requests for summer-long boat slips for the marinas. On the other hand, there were a greater than normal number of transient boats arriving in the Hamptons for overnight sailors to enjoy the sights. Over Labor Day weekend, the number of ships requiring moorings or dockage exceeded the number of moorings and dockage available by a landslide. Yet the people moored anyway-there was a forest of them in Three Mile Harbor over Labor Day weekend. The Town Marine Patrol had a field day handing out $75 illegal mooring tickets, which the mariners happily paid because they couldn't moor in the bay because of high winds and rain, and it was cheaper to pay the fine than find a motel room. The restaurant business was off, because most people were cutting back and eating at home more often. They still had to eat, after all. Also, at the restaurants, the cost per meal was way down, both because people were ordering farther down the menu and less of it, and because many restaurants resorted to $25 three course dinner specials to get the diners in.

I think this information, gathered mostly from East Hampton, is probably accurate for all the Hamptons, it seems to me. And here is what this all means, in my opinion.

Our economy is largely driven by farming and fishing and tourism. The temperature taking above is only about the tourism part, but it is the biggest part. It is also probably true that farming and fishing probably slumped this year by the same as the country as a whole—which slumped 15%. On the other hand, Wall Street, which largely powers the summer homeowner part of the Hamptons tourism economy, slumped by nearly 50%.

Here is what I think happened as far as different groups were concerned.

The local people got through the summer okay, but it was painful. Jobs were scarce. The jobs to be had paid less than last year. They were a little soured by all of this, but determined to push through. I don't think there was any mass exodus by the locals to points elsewhere. People love it in the Hamptons and they would stick it out. Incidentally, at the very lowest end, there was real hardship. Activity at the food pantries this summer was the same as last year, but last year it was up by half from the year before. By this year, with a repeat performance, there may have even been a net loss of legal and illegal immigrants in this community, as many of them returned to their homelands.

The wealthy were here in somewhat fewer numbers, with their hands gripping their wallets tightly in their pockets and their sense of entitlement largely muted. There were Madoff victims here. Indeed, Madoff was living here until January. Interestingly, the wealthy seemed almost polite-apologetic if you will, since so much of their wealth depended upon Wall Street-but they were here nevertheless, and buying nevertheless, but at bargain prices if possible. They were worried, and for some of them it meant their fortunes, which might have been $10 million last year, were now $5 million this year. They'd cut back to husband against further erosion. Certainly, nobody was in a good mood to buy real estate at bargain prices, to live in or for investment purposes, either. Those renting waited until the final minute to pick up good homes for far less, as the renters panicked at the end.

The daytrippers and the weekenders were, I think, here in dramatically greater numbers. You could see the surge every weekend, and on the streets you saw fewer Blahnik shoes and Gucci bags and more Bermuda shorts and t-shirts. They are just as nice people as anybody else, but the grooming is not the same. That's just the way it is. Money equals grooming. Fashion, too.

The net result was a change in what this place is. It may be only a temporary change, but it is a

ESTATE OF MIND Real Estate Rants and Rumblings

By T.J. Clemente

There's one segment of the real estate market that can never die-the buying of the first home, usually by newlyweds or young couples about to have their first or second child and deciding its time to invest in a home and their family's future. With credit tighter than any time in the last 10 years, these buyers have obstacles. But with some new legislation now in effect in the State of New York, the mortgage costs will be somewhat alleviated through tax deductions for the first 20% of interest paid, dollar for dollar. The other 80% of the interest paid will be itemized on the tax return under existing codes.

There are some requirements—this tax break applies only to fixed mortgages from participating banks, which for now include Bank of America, Wells Fargo, M&T Bank and a few others. State officials believe more will follow. There are also eligibility requirements concerning household income and purchase price for first homebuyers. To be eligible, homebuyers numbering two must have a combined income of $122,160 or less. For families of three or more, the household income threshold is $142,520. The homes themselves must be priced below $637,640 or $779,340 in "target areas."

One thing a first time homeowner should do is

crunch the numbers with an accountant. A banker recently offered this advice: "Don't go for too much house on the first buy. Buy a home where you can put down 20%, so if the market slides down you have equity remaining in the home. Insist on a fixed-rate mortgage so that your costs moving forward are known." He said too many people try to buy too much house and put down as little as possible, and then go for the least expensive mortgage plan (like interest only) to free up money for furnishings, etc. What happens is a pattern of overextending for things like giant TVs, painting the house, new bathrooms or kitchens, and new major appliances—often purchased through finance plans. All of a sudden the momentum and excitement of the new digs makes first time homebuyers lose the focus and saving habits that made owning a home possible.

The rule of thumb should be: don't pay over 35% of your pretax income on mortgage payment, property tax and insurances. Too many banks, like Bank of America, allow this number to go to 45% before throwing up the red flag.

Research has consistently proven that people buy homes they feel they will grow into, but sometimes overconfidence of income growth and underestimating the cost of owning a home col-

For the first time homeowner, too often the numbers can only be met by two incomes. When buying a house, plan for stoppage of income, due to job change. Another wise idea is to map out a long-term cash flow plan 10 years out. Use existing data on the cost of real estate tax growth, overhead growth, income growth, needs like new cars, and scheduled upkeep on the home. Too often the rush and the excitement of how much house we can get, or the enthusiasm in buying the home leads to financial planning of getting into the home—but not staying in it.

There are other opportunities today for the first homebuyers in addition to the new program mentioned above. The time to buy a first home is usually not dictated by market conditions but by life stages. But experts are right that there is no better investment than a home, it is the investment that can and will give infinite pleasure to those who buy what they can afford, rather than become a slave to payments. Buy your first home wisely, and the others will come in time. Over extend too much and the heavy lifting may collapse you.

All of the real estate agents I have spoken to while doing this column insist that next year, the opportunity to get reasonable prices may be gone. If it's the right time, don't wait, act-and act prudently but with a plan. As Ben Franklin said, "Those who fail to plan, plan to fail," but remember there is no place like home, especially if it happens to be here.

change nevertheless. If this community's economy has been 60% wealthy, 20% local and 20% weekender in the summertime, then I dare say this past summer it probably was 50% wealthy, 15% local and 35% weekender. It's tending more downscale, a reversal of the dramatic upscale surge that has been the order of the day for the last quarter of a century. And it's tending smaller because of the losses on Wall Street.

Another change in general is a more serious, respectful and well-mannered approach to everything. People are sobered by events. They look out for one another. Crime is less. We'll get through this. How soon? Who knows? Some say it might take five years for the national economy to perk up. As for Wall Street, it fell quicker and farther, and it will return sooner than you

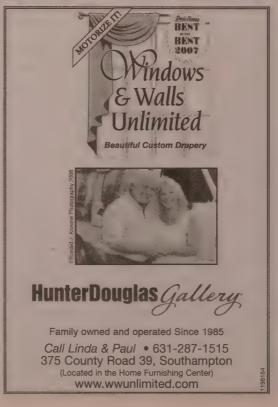

In some ways, it's possible to think that, at least thus far, things have gotten a little bit more balanced than before. There are more fairs and circuses and fewer fundraisers. There are more Toyotas and fewer Mercedes. Real estate is more affordable. It could even be said that this summer it was easier to park downtown during the week, though probably harder on the weekend. Everybody loves the Hamptons after all, if not for the fishing, farming, boating and surfing, then for the splendid beauty of this place. There will always be people who will find a way to come here.

At least we didn't have a full blown crash to match the Great Depression. Count your blesscoil glow, but it guzzles electricity like crazy.

Here's how they tell you that this device can save you money in heating your home.

HEAT SURGE Roll-n-Glow Fireplace...actually rolls from room-to-room so you can turn down your thermostat and take the heat with you anywhere. Immediately start saving on heat bills."

Who needs heat in a room where you are not? There is logic to that.

Here is what the ad says about the flickering

"These remarkable fireplaces are being called a miracle because they have what's being called the 'Fireless Flame' patented technology that gives you the peaceful flicker of a real fire, but without any flames, fumes. smells, ashes or mess. Everyone is getting them because they require no chimney and no vent. You just plug them in.

"[And it] looks so real it fools everyone, but there is no real fire. That makes the flame window safe to the touch under the watchful eye of a parent. It's where the kids will play and the cat and dog will sleep:"

Of course, it's also about the Amish. They are a proud, industrious, God fearing people. The biggest picture in the ad shows Amish workers inside a barn sanding and staining and polishing the mantle pieces. They are very serious about it. They wear identical white shirts, suspenders and straw hats. Some have beards. The man in the foreground has a white beard and wears wire frame eyeglasses. There's a woman with a bonnet behind him holding what appears to be a broom.

And you can get two heaters FREE!

Here's how it works. During the next 48 hours, if you hurry and call, you can get up to two of the heaters for nothing! All you have to do is pay $298 plus shipping each for the Amish made mantle piece—a work of art and a real steal at that price. The HEAT SURGE miracle heater is totally encased inside and

"A strict limit of two per household has been imposed. Since some home woodworkers want to build their own mantle piece, they are letting people get the imported miracle heater alone for just $249. Or, with the Amish made mantle you get the miracle heater free."

"Amish craftsmen are working their fingers to the bone to be sure everyone gets their delivery in time to save a lot of money. So when lines are busy, keep trying or log onto amishfireplaces.com. We promise to get to every call."

So says Timothy Milton, National Shipping Director. "You will instantly feel bone soothing heat in any room. You will never have to be cold again."

So there you have it. I honestly think this is a pretty good deal. I paid more than $300 for mine 10 years ago and it doesn't have a wood frame or wheels. As for the rest of this hocus pocus, well, if the truth in advertising council lets them say all this, what the hell.

The product has the Good Housekeeping Seal of Approval. And it has certification of the Underwriters Laboratories coveted UL Listing. (Their words.) Call 1-800-235-8052.

TWENTYSOMETHING... By David Lion Rattiner

Hitler? Seriously?

I'm not much of a political guy, and I understand both sides of the fence on a lot of issues—like healthcare. I agree with Republicans on a lot of things and I agree with Democrats about others, and this is not at all what I want to talk about in this column. But last week, I was walking down to Main Street in Bridgehampton to get some lunch. Outside of the Post Office was a little political action table about healthcare.

This is a great thing about America, I thought. We have free speech here and if people feel strongly about something they can talk about it in a nonviolent way. I was walking by the table when a man stopped me and then said, "Are you ready to take action against Obama? Our modern day Hitler?"

Hitler? I thought.

Sure enough though, on the table were a bunch of photographs, some of Adolf Hitler and others of Obama with a Hitler mustache. There were also pictures of swastikas. All of this in Bridgehampton, home to hundreds of Jewish families. "I'm Jewish dude, you don't think that bringing Hitler into this is a bit of a stretch?"

The guy was thrown off for a second. I stood there in thought. Bush was compared to Hitler by Democrats and I can remember seeing the same image of Bush with a mustache on television and being angry about it. I'm firmly against the war in Iraq and like Obama less and less as we continue to stay there, but Hitler comparisons get my blood a little elevated, and that takes a lot to do. There's a bit of a difference between the most evil organization known to this planet, headed up by a guy who led eight million people into gas chambers, then dumped their bodies into mass graves—because of their religion. Democrats and Republicans like to argue pretty much over everything, even meaningless things, but I think this is a little black and white. Bush is not like Hitler. Obama is not like Hitler.

Freedom of Speech though, I guess. I felt like expressing my freedom of speech and pulled out my video camera and started taping these guys.

There was a woman there and when I asked, "Is Obama like Hitler?" she replied with a bitchy smile. "They're practically the same person," then gave me a pamphlet with Hitler and Obama standing next to each other.

I asked more questions, being as direct as I could, "Should Jews be worried because Obama is going to round them up and murder them in gas chambers like Hitler did?"

They nodded. My grandmother would be turning over in the grave to hear about this. It was getting uncomfortable for them I think. I left.

I called three synagogues in the Hamptons when I got back to work then posted the video I took on danshamptons.com. At the Hampton Synagogue in Westhampton Beach, Rabbi Avraham Bronstein got back to me and said that people like that should just be ignored—that they don't realize how horrible what they're saying is, and that they can't compromise or be reasoned with. But he suggested I write about it.

So I'm doing that. I'm sure we'll get calls at the office from crazies, but I don't care. You just shouldn't compare Hitler to anybody. Period.

In Germany, as one man said, they first came for the Communists. I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Communist. Then they came for the Jews. I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Jew. Then they came for the trade unionists. I didn't speak up because I wasn't a trade unionist. Then they came for the Catholics. I didn't speak up because I wasn't Catholic. Then they came for me—and by that time no one was left to speak.

ry. It may not have been the fault of all Party leaders, but they're in charge and have lost the confidence of the populace, even to the point of being booed in public. Ouch.

If things don't turn around fast, many long established political figures and traditions could end in the name of a cry for change, of any kind. State Assemblyman Fred Thiele said, "Locally, the people vote personalities not political parties." But George Washington University political science professor Charles Purcell used to say, "Voters more often vote when their wallets and pocketbooks are empty, angrily—than when times are good."

But it's not a philosophical ideology sweeping the East End. It's a competency test. No matter who wins the supervisor positions in the two towns, these things are certain: there will be new and higher taxes and huge spending cuts; services will be affected; and the people still won't be very happy.

Atlantic Sea Island Group is proposing to build a LNG plant just where we asked, out in the Atlantic. It proposes to build it 14 miles out into the ocean, off Long Beach, just outside the entrance to New York Harbor, where the ocean waves can lap on, no, not a battleship, but a glorious Atlantic Sea Island about the same size and shape as the one proposed for Long Island, but with, apparently, foliage on it.

And guess what? The general public doesn't want it in the ocean either. A group called Green Long Island has been formed and last week sent out its first e-mail blast to rally the troops.

"This island will encompass 116 acres of the ocean's floor on the Cholera Bank and will be constructed upward in a pyramid-like land mass in approximately 65 feet deep federal waters. It will sit 30 feet above sea level," the email read.

Don't they get it? Americans do not want an LNG plant in the Atlantic Ocean. Didn't they hear that the first time when they proposed one for Long Island Sound? We said no in the Sound, put it in the ocean, but we really meant don't put it in the ocean, either. What we want is the propane and the national gas delivered as soon as we make the phone call, and what we don't want is the gas plant so they can bring it to us. The gas plant should be somewhere else. Hide it behind an iceberg or something. No, that might endanger the polar bears. Forget that.

We want bottled water brought from halfway around the world by giant tankers from the Fiji Islands and we want to be able to flick a switch and have electricity. But we don't want the nuclear or coal or gas fired plants to give it to us anywhere around here and we certainly don't want light bulbs that keep burning out on purpose, like we used to

Now we have those squiggly ones that don't burn out, but the color is off. We don't want that either. And they're expensive—about nine bucks instead of 99 cents. So go figure.

We also want each and every one of us to have a car, or even two cars, but we don't want the traffic jams and we certainly don't want the roads they are planning to build right over near where we live or on the way to where we

And what is this global warming crap? Get rid of it. It's scaring us.

Where Did You Get THAT?

By Susan M. Galardi

Take a look at the photos above. They came from a variety of stores right here in the Hamptons, including the ARF Thrift Shop in Wainscott, Sylvester & Co. in Amagansett, CarpetMan in Southampton, Pottery Barn and Restoration Hardware outlets in Riverhead, and Marder's Nursery in Bridgehampton. They have one thing in common: they were all great deals, yes—right here in the Hamptons. (See key below for what came from where.)

Recently, my family moved from our house in the Northwest Woods in East Hampton to a new home in North Haven. As anyone who's ever bought a house knows, once you sit at a closing table, you basically hemorrhage money for the next year. In addition to the necessary moving costs, closing costs, insurance, etc., there's the issue of stuff. Rarely does the stuff you have work when you move. "I could NEVER bring that 12 year old sofa to our new house — even if it is from Classic Sofa and will never die," you might think. Change the sofa, and you have to change the rest of the living room furniture. Then the rug doesn't work anymore.

Other issues in a new house are layout and dimensions of rooms. Our son had a cabinet in his old room that hid a multitude of sin, as my mother would say. Well, the height of it didn't work in his new room, so, in a stroke of genius, I took it apart – the wide base with endless drawer space is a big night table. The bookcase is free standing.

So there we were with a new house in need of everything from comforters for queen size beds to perennials for flower beds. Which leads to more expenses, and most families these days have to pick their battles between bargains and must haves. So my partner and I set out to find dream furniture for prices that didn't give us nightmares.

Last weekend, the CarpetMan in Southampton had its annual sale, which was billed as more of a "give-away." I always thought CarpetMan was a place people went to get cheap (read, poor quality) wall-to-wall carpet, or remnants that were wierd colors with frayed edges. Then I went to a friend's $2.5 million, 4,000 square foot house and saw high quality, professionally bound rugs. Well, that's a few thousand each, I thought. Wrong. He got them at CarpetMan for several hundred – yes, hundred.

I went to CarpetMan and talked with Robert Gill, who took over the business from his father in 1993. There was nary a frayed end in sight. Instead, it looked like a high end showroom in Manhattan, a relaxed place with gorgeous, highest end area rugs from Australian wool sisals to Schumacher. Not surprising that many of the carpets Gill sells end up in the Manhattan condos.

Gill explained that remnants aren't extra carpet material cut off from someone else's order. Nor are the "seconds," with irregularities or stains. His remnants come directly from the carpet mills that might have overrups

Because we only had one room that needed a new carpet, for now, we decided to order a custom carpet from a manufacturer. These were still at a 30% discount. We went to the Godfrey-Hirst wool sisals from Australia. "The Hamptons leans toward sisal because it's a beachy look," said Gill. "But sisal has issues. Now there are wools woven to look like sisal that are much more durable."

On CarpetMan's sale weekend, they offered free installation, free poly biding, a free felt pad and free delivery. "It's a real sale," said Gill. "It hurts us, but lets us bring in new inventory."

You can wait until the big sale next spring, or go now for amazing deals on an endless array of top quality rugs, carpets and wood flooring (don't get me start-

Before going to CarpetMan, we learned about Sylvester & Co.'s annual warehouse sale. Sylvester's is one of those stores (three stores actually) that I wander into on a regular basis to see beautiful things that I don't own and wish I did. This time, I was hell bent on making purchases.

We got lucky: we got a gorgeous sofa, outrageous chair, and sculptural coffee table all within our budget. The chair was more than I bargained for - I glazed over at the price - but the sofa was less than what we expected to pay so it all worked out. Items at the warehouse sale were marked down at least 30%. This is a sale worth waiting for.

Before we moved, I carried a tape measure with me at all times, as well as the dimensions of all the rooms in the house. And I made weekly lunch hour trips to ARF and The Retreat thrift shops. One day, at ARF, they were unloading some new inventory. We have an enclosed porch at the new house in need of quick fix on the floor. I spied and enormous sisal rug and unrolled it. The room is 13 x13. So was the rug! I shoved it into my car.

The other odd thing we looked for was a double bed frame - that's a hard size to find these days. Well, that same day at ARF, there was a gorgeous, architectural dark wood, horizontal slat, bedframe, perfect for a young boy's room.

I'm not a big fan of outlets and malls. And after much anxiety at Tanger, I've come to realize that the only stores there worth my while are the Restoration Hardware and Pottery Barn outlets. Inventory changes regularly, and the longer a piece is there the more it's knocked down (and knocked around - be careful of dings). On our last foray to Riverhead, we didn't come away with the sofas and carpets we'd hoped for. But we got lucky with a good bathroom cabinet and some great standing lamps at Restoration, as well as a happy blue media cabinet from Pottery Barn

Finally, in an effort to make our North Haven property less of a tick farm, we cleaned up some dead shrubs and dead trees smothered by invasive vines in the front. Once the dead stuff was taken away, that left a huge area that looked pretty barren. There's not much that's indigineous and deer proof these days except grasses, and we needed a lot to make a dent. Fortunately, most plant stock is on sale these days so we went right to the top - Marder's in Bridgehampton. Charlie Marder is an artistic genius when it comes to plant material, and the 40% off sale helped a lot. But there is so much eye-popping stuff there – outrageous

Putting Your Valuables in Mme. Paulette's Hands

By David Lion Rattiner

"I would like to take this opportunity to thank you and your staff for the extraordinary effort rendered in detailing the interior of Mr. Trump's Boeing 727 aircraft..." — Michael F. Donovan, Director - Flight Operations, The Trump Organization

As with all things in life, achieving excellence in any field or profession breeds success. Madame Paulette is what Tiger Woods is to golf, or Michael Jordan to basketball. For Madame Paulette their game is textile care and they are the masters of their domain. Whether it is a yacht, house, plane, boat, leathers and furs, wedding gown, designer apparel, home furnishing or anything else that is valuable, expensive and important to you Madame Paulette is where the best of the best of New York, and even the world dare to take their one of a kind pieces.

As far as what the business does, the owner of the company, John Mahdessian, explained it best, "My job is to keep the world spotless, one spot at a time."

But it is the excellence and the service of his company that shines through. Mahdessian handles it all, from million dollar estates, to dresses and gowns worth hundreds of thousands, to museum pieces. His team can restore, prepare and clean anything, anywhere at any time and his reputation speaks for itself. Besides his celebrity clientele, even the top insurance companies call on him. His techniques are as sophisticated as his business. Mahdessian explains that, "Insurance companies who are insuring high net worth individuals who suffer a loss from damage call us for full restorations. In some cases for example, a rug worth $100,000 might be damaged from a flood and the insurance companies call us to restore the rug back to its original condition. I'd say in the case that items that thought to be unsalvageable, 90% of the time are salvageable when they come to us."

The professionalism of this company is astounding, and their success is 100% tied to the performance and quality of the work that they do, but also to the sophisticated techniques that they employ. They do what is thought of as impossible by competitors, putting the company in its own league. Founded on the principle of excellence over half a century ago, Madame Paulette has achieved the status of being the finest custom couture cleaner in the world. Located in the heart of New York City, the name has reached many clients in the Hamptons.

Mahdessian's business is known to serve internationally renowned couture designers, retail establishments, celebrities, dignitaries, corporate executives and high-profile VIPs. One can only imagine what a day in the office is like at Madame Paulette, but I got a taste of it while interviewing Mahdessian over the telephone, "Just a second Dave, can you hang on a second? What's that? Eva Longoria wants to wear that gown? Make that happen, yank it out of the window."

Apparently Eva Longoria saw a dress in the window she liked and wanted to wear it to a high profile event. "I'm telling you, if you were a fly on the wall during our conference calls you have enough to write about for 100 years," Mahdessian laughs.

Madame Paulette's business in the Hamptons is growing thanks to a large demographic out here who have expensive home furnishings that they want to last forever and to keep looking like new. "We maintain and preserve the integrity and value for some of the most expensive items in the world, so when you come to us it's an investment in the item. In the Hamptons we offer constant care programs to maintain and preserve the beautiful home materials, textiles and furnishings year round, and can dispatch a team at any time to home within 24 hours."

So who is Madame Paulette? Well the man behind running the company, Mahdessian, is a third generation owner of the family who founded it. The history of the company is interesting and rich. It started in the early 1950s when Noubar Mahdessian began working at his uncle's dry cleaning business while attending school at night. An Armenian immigrant with determination to own a business, Mahdessian quickly learned the trade and found great satisfaction in his work. In just a few years, Mahdessian purchased (continued on page 40)

The Future of Solar Has Never Been Brighter

By Donna Avedon

Solar is definitely a strong buzzword these days, especially in the building and construction industry. As energy costs continue to rise, more homeowners are seeking alternative means to power their homes. Utilizing the sun's energy is one of the easiest ways to help save on energy costs while protecting the environment. Renewable energy from the sun offers a simple and productive method for producing power while lowering your utility costs.

In the past, the lack of aesthetics and high cost of installation had squelched solar conversions in many neighborhoods. Solar panels were perceived as an eyesore, both bulky and obvious. Until recently, the solar industry focused only on function not form. Now the industry is beginning to recognize aesthetics as an important factor in the residential market.

The roof's appearance was a non-issue for the Nature Conservancy's project in East Hampton. The architect hired the solar design professionals, Go Solar Inc., located in Riverhead, to install the hottest product in solar technology — Building Integrated Photovoltaic (BIPV). Go Solar, Inc. owner, Gary Minnick said, "A solar roof with this beautiful system blends well with most architectural styles."

BIPV is a system of photovoltaic laminates that are bonded to a metal roofing system with a wiring connection that sends direct electrical current to an inverter. The inverter converts this alternating electrical current to satisfy the structure's utility loads. The laminate used is a flexible, extremely lightweight self-adhesive material that is less than a quarter-inch thick and attaches easily to standing seam roof panels. This thin photovoltaic laminate captures energy from the sun and converts it to electricity throughout the day. In the average home – around 1,200 sq. ft. – the photovoltaic film usually generates all the energy the home requires. If the system supplies more electricity than the structure requires, solar energy will turn the utility meter backwards and reduce or eliminate the utility bill

Minnick pointed out that the emergence of this attractive roof integrated product "has encouraged many more high-end home builders to incorporate solar systems into their projects." He said "solar cells are available in different colors, so there is no limitation for the architect or the designer." These modules have various degrees of translucency and can be used as filtered daylight sources, which works especially well for skylights and clerestory windows.

Another new emerging product is solar shingles, which resemble traditional asphalt roofing shingles, but are, in fact, photovoltaic in nature. If aesthetics are a big issue, solar shingles are for you. Available in a variety of styles and colors, they protect your home from the elements and converting sunlight into electricity. In addition, they're made of thin, flexible material, so they blend well with the architectural detail of your roof. Solar Shingles make a very attractive choice for new construction because they can be incorporated into the design right from the beginning.

Minnick pointed out that sales of all types of solar energy systems are on the rise due to dropping production costs and incredible rebate incentives. Here on Long Island, homeowners who invest in solar equipment can expect a pay-off in seven to nine years, depending on initial cost and installation techniques. Installing just a solar water heating system can save a family of four more than $670 a year on oil-gas bills.

Bill Anderson, a contractor from Center Moriches, considered solar powering his home in 2003, but at the time found the cost "prohibitive." When he looked into the installation again in the fall of 2006 he was pleasantly surprised. Anderson was sold on solar electricity when he realized rebates and tax incentives would reduce the cost of his 9.7-kilowatt system from $67,000 to $28,250. New York State offers tax credit up to 25% on installations, with the federal government kicking in up to 30%. Both New York State and Suffolk County wave any sales tax. Anderson received a rebate check for $39,000 from LIPA for his solar roof. With electrical rates certain to climb, he and his wife decided it was a wise investment.

"If enough people install solar panels it will have a tremendous impact on the environment," Anderson said. "You don't look at this only in terms of dollars and cents. We're trying to generate renewable power so we're not just burning fossil fuels." He added that selecting solar "is a no-brainer."

To Replace or Reupholster? That Is the Question

By Allegra Dioguardi

So, you have this sofa. It's in pretty good shape, it's comfortable enough, but the burgundy and hunter green pin dot fabric on it just isn't cutting it anymore. Or maybe the dark heavy damask that looked so great a few winters ago just doesn't reflect your current frame of mind (what were you thinking?) You'd love a new, updated look. It seems like such a waste to put it out by the curb. You could wait until burgundy and hunter green come back into vogue or you could look at other options. What to do? Reupholster? Or buy new? What about a slipcov-

If your old sofa frame has held up for 10 years or more, chances are it is good quality or it wouldn't have lasted that long. Good frames just don't wear out. Or maybe you bought a sofa in the last few years that was top of the line, great quality and now you want a new look and wonder about the best way to achieve that. Shannon Willey, owner of Broken Colour Works, where they offer extensive interior design services, says a good hardwood frame that is "screwed, glued and doweled" is worth reupholstering. Good quality sofa frames are made of hardwood; you can tell if your sofa is hardwood by lifting it up – they're heavy! The frame is joined with double dowels (wood pins) and wood blocks, or screws. More often than not, the typical sofas you find in stores today have frames that are stapled together and made of plywood rather than hardwood. They are lightweight and not exactly heirloom material.

These well-constructed sofas and upholstery generally have springs inside that are "eight way hand tied," meaning they are all tied together to work as a complete foundation. You can tell if you have this kind of construction by looking underneath. If you see webbing and burlap, then you know you have coil springs. To a great extent, the furniture made today is mass-produced and not of this quality. Also, the low-density foam that is commonly used these days looks great at first, but breaks down after some use. Mike Catalano, of CLS upholstery, made a good point. He told me that the cost of purchasing a new sofa has pretty much stayed the same for the last 10 years but the quality has gone down. CLS Upholstery is a family-owned business and has been doing upholstering since 1945. Catalano says that by reupholstering, using modern materials and traditional skills, you can end up with a "custom couch" that is superior to the original.

Another consideration when weighing the pros and cons of reupholstering is fabric selection. When you reupholster, your choice of fabrics is virtually limitless. You are not restricted to the choices offered by a sofa manufacturer. English Country Antiques, with showrooms in Bridgehampton and Southampton, has a library of beautiful imported European fabrics and designers who can help you with your fabric selection. Don't like those bun feet anymore? Add a skirt. When you reupholster, you can rebuild the sofa to an extent, even changing things, such as the style of the arms and the back height. Tailored, contemporary furniture can become ruffled and romantic and a sofa with a traditional box-pleated skirt can be transformed into a sleek and contem-

Madame Paulette from his uncle. His wife, Ann, soon joined him at the Madame Paulette store and together they slowly increased business and developed a loyal following. Almost 30 years later, their son, John, made a last minute decision to turn down a high-powered Wall Street job so that he could run Madame Paulette. Mahdessian has always shared a passion for his family and their business and has expanded Madame Paulette's services, advanced technology, and set his gaze on a bright future for the company that his parents had built.

Mahdessian has continued the vision of his family and it has worked, attracting the biggest names in the industry of fashion and handling the finest estates, offices, boats, planes and properties in the world.

Apparel houses such as Hermes, Carolina Herrera and Vera Wang use Madame Paulette. Corporations including Bergdorf Goodman and Trump International Hotel and Tower and high profile clients, including Anna Wintour, Kelly Ripa, Barbara Walters and Sting, all depend on Madame Paulette for superb care of their garments and interior home textiles. "Restoration is like surgery, we evaluate the entire situation. There are many situations where people come to us after going to others who have told them that they cannot restore their items and we are able to do it."

Recently, the company was responsible for the cleaning and restoration of Saint Vartan Armenian Cathedral. Madame Paulette cleaned and restored the church's vintage artifacts, including the furniture, rugs and carpets. They also specialized preparation and maintenance of Melania's Christian Dior Couture wedding gown to insure perfection on the day of her wedding to Donald Trump at the Mar-a-Lago estate.

In the Hamptons, there really is no better of a fit for an organization like this. Sometimes, when your pride and joy of a garment needs altering or fixing, you need to bring it to the best and to the next level of service and tailoring. When you want the service from a trustworthy company to enter your home and keep it to your standards, need a concierge or driver, or just about anything when it comes to cleaning and maintaining perfection, Madame Paulette is a company to contact. You can call them at 212-838-6827 or you can visit their Web site at madamepaulette.com.

porary sofa. There are lots of options!

Comfort, function and size of the sofa come into play as well. Perhaps the piece is an unusual or hard to find size that fits perfectly in your home. Henry Hildreth of Hildreth's Department Stores, where they have an onsite custom upholstery workroom, said it best: "Let your body tell the story." Sometimes a sofa fits you perfectly. If you just love the way your head rests on the arm while taking an afternoon snooze, by all means, reupholster. He also pointed out that furniture might have historical or sentimental value as well, making the choice to reupholster a good option.

Depending on the condition of your furniture, reupholstery could entail simply replacing the fabric covering or as much as reconstructing the entire frame and springs, as well as fabricating new cushions. The advantage of having your furniture reupholstered is that it essentially ends up looking like brand new furniture. The cost varies widely and depends on the amount of work you have done and the fabric you select (approximately 22 yards for an average sofa). This process can be pricey and you need to weigh the cost against the quality of the piece. Good, well-constructed furniture will last for years and may only require new fabric to revive it. Having good furniture reupholstered can be less expensive than buying comparable furniture in today's market. The professionals I consulted with agreed, each piece should be appraised on an individual basis.

If your furniture is in good condition and you like the style of it, another more affordable option is slip covering. Slipcovers are a fabric cover that is placed over your existing upholstery, like a second skin. A custom made slipcover is made to fit your sofa and it's completely removable for cleaning. If you have children, pets, or are just looking to change the ambiance of a room, a custom slipcover is the perfect solution at approximately half the price. You can even have two slipcovers made of different fabrics and they can be changed seasonally — a lighter weight and color for summer and something warmer and richer for the winter months, when the weather gets colder.

Fully upholstered chairs follow the same rules as sofas, although they obviously require less fabric and labor. Exposed wood chairs are another category all together and if you own any that need a new fabric facelift, it almost always makes sense to reupholster them. Frequently, they only have an upholstered seat and back and perhaps a little fabric on the arms. They may only require a few yards of fabric and they are less labor intensive to reupholster making it a much more affordable proposition.

Look at the quality of the frame, the size, the comfort factor, any sentimental value and weigh your options. Still can't decide? The best thing to do is to call a pro. Many of them provide shop at home services and will come to you and they are all available by phone for consultation.

Chance Meetings, or, the Comfort of Strangers

"Be prepared to worry for the rest of your life."

A friend of ours told us this just before our son was born.

I would add to that:

"Be prepared to feel guilty for the rest of your life."

No matter what we give our son, I feel it's not enough. I'm not talking about toys and gadgets, but about toys and gadgets, but about experiences, education, life lessons – the big picture.

I'm a conservatory-trained musician. I've spent tens of thousands of dollars to learn things like the difference between a Bellini and Rossini ornament — and I'm not talking about champagne and peach nectar, nor Italian Christmas bulbs. I spent cumulative years of my life practicing nerve-wracking Hannon finger exercises for piano and memorizing intervals of atonal vocal music that only dogs in heat could appreciate. But as far as passing that knowledge on to Hudson? It's a case of the cobbler's son has no shoes.

Well, that's not entirely true. When he was a baby, I played guitar for him and let him put his ear to the body to really experience the sound (I played very lightly). All of my instruments — guitars, piano, drums — were available to him at all times. I sang him Mozart arias to put him to sleep, and have given him vocal tips. And I've sat down with him at the piano several times — even bought that intimidating Suzuki method book. It's those regular music lessons that are a challenge. Maybe we should just send him to a teacher, I think. But what message would that relay? "Mumma is a musician but she won't teach me." So I try to make a commitment to the regular lessons. If I were only more disciplined ...

Beyond music, Hudson has other interests that I wish I could help develop or even participate in. He's dying to go fishing – not something my partner and I really enjoy, to say the least. But here we are on an island in the Atlantic where people come from all over the world to fish, and we're denying our son that god-given right, I think, as I wake up sweating in the middle of the night.

And he wants to learn to surf. We've been helping him with that, since we're both body boarding and body surfing fans. But he wants to go to the next level.

A few years ago, walking on an empty fall beach, my partner and I saw a gorgeous, sleek wooden thing that looked like a table top. It turned out to be a skim board. Hudson was only about three, so we put it in the basement. But this year, particularly at SagMain on Monday nights, a lot of kids around his age were using skim boards, and he was intrigued. He tried their boards a few times and liked it. I finally let it slip that we had a skim board in the basement, and we started taking it to the beach. Considering that skate boarding is long in my past, and my expertise on water boards stops once I have to go beyond the horizontal position, I couldn't help him with skim board technique. We just let him watch and learn from the other kids, borrowing their boards or experimenting with his. I felt guilty. Of course we could get him instruction, but wouldn't it be better if...

A few days ago on Long Beach, there were strips of shallow water along the beach. Hudson saw a couple boys on skim boards, with a very tall, muscular guy. He ran over to them with his board. The boys were brothers, four and five years old, taking turns on a skim board. Hudson sat with the man, talking about skim boards, the ocean, school. All the while, the man provided passive instruction to the boys – a comment here, a comment there – to help them hone their technique. Hudson watched as they skimmed and slipped – boys younger than he. His competitive urge came out, and he picked up his board.

The man, whom we assumed was the father, included Hudson in his surf class. It turned out, not surprising, that he was an avid Montauk surfer. Now he gave all three boys pointers, showing Hudson how to throw, telling him about board wax. I watched with joy and gratitude – love it when other parents are so generous and inclusive.

And I watched with guilt. Hudson shouldn't be learning from a stranger – a random surfer dude with pierced nipples whom we happened upon at the beach. He should be sharing this experience with a parent who knows how to surf. I hope he doesn't feel deprived. An athletic boy like him needs a parent who surfs and fishes and –

It was time for the trio to leave. The man carried the younger boy to the car to get him in dry clothes. The older one stayed and played with Hudson as long as he could. The man called for him again.

"You'd better get going," my partner said to the older boy, "Your dad's waiting for you."

The little boy gave Hudson a high five and picked up his board. "He's not my dad," he said. "He's my baby sitter."

Art Commentary

by Marion Wolberg Weiss

While Dennis Leri's new works at Peter Marcelle Contemporary Gallery in Southampton is composed of three series, only one is titled "Urban Cadence." But the entire exhibit could be described similarly. The most dramatic series is called "50s Optimism" and celebrates the era of the car. The subject is perfect for the present time, reminding us that during the 1950s particularly, the car was a commodity that would live forever. We know differently now.

Judging from some films paying homage to the car, the term "Urban Cadence" would certainly apply. Consider American Graffiti and Rebel Without a Cause, two movies that defined teen culture in terms of the automobile's energy and independence in Los Angeles.

In the 1950s, the car invaded other cultures, like Cuba, remaining an icon to this day. During that period, it also represented power, status and sexual appeal in the commercial market place, a role that it currently does not hold.

For artist Leri, cars played multiple roles, his loyalty for his Chevy (or was it a Ford) being a prime example. The car series attempts to recapture the joy and enthusiasm unique to the period, and unique to Leri's life, no doubt.

We can see why. He uses the original luscious colors of many of the decade's cars, like meadow green, coral and turquoise, placing aluminum sheeting on the surface to symbolize the era's "new metal." What's intriguing about the configurations are the abstract patterns that emerge. Such patterns suggest all sorts of images and figures, which seem spontaneously created. The result: some of the freshest abstractions we've seen in a long time.

Leri's two other series are equally fresh. His metal vertical abstractions recall past works with similar material but different themes. This time, the patterns form rhythms and motion that mirror musical notes or city skyscrapers. Or just about anything that strikes the spectator.

Leri's last series, titled "Relationships," is a group of sculptures suggesting interpersonal communication between shapes, forms, angles and negative space. It's a point made in "Art Commentary" two weeks ago, describing pieces by Jack Stone. Leri's work is entirely different - he doesn't call attention to hardedge abstraction. His works contain circles, lines and pathways that create a peaceful ambience, although the sculptures are mostly vertical forms.

Leri has also produced a collection of inanimate objects where he evokes animation. Come to think of it, that could apply to all three series.

Dennis Leri's exhibit will be on view at Peter Marcell Conemporary Gallery in Southampton until Sept. 24. Call 631- 204-9704 for hours.

Corrections: In the Sept. 4 issue, the photo was misappropriated. The sculptor is Jack Stone.

In the September 11 issue, the dress featured was by Nicole Miller, not Vera Wang.

Honoring the Artist: Keith MANTEll

While this week's cover artist, Keith Mantell, been involved in selling art for many years (associated with Southampton's Chrysalis Gallery), he didn't start painting until two years ago - a full three decades after graduating from art school. The cover's landscape reflects Mantell's favorite subject, as it also mirrors a recurring style. After careful examination, it becomes evident to this critic that such a style recalls some of Mantell's most revered artists, like Mangold, Thiebaud and Serra, where the line is articulated in clear, precise ways.

But make no mistake about it. Mantell is equally clear and precise when he says he doesn't want to copy other artists, and that he may make a reference to another person, but "my work is mine, my own

Q: You have had a very full life working in New York with an art auction house and then at a gallery in Southampton. After 30 years, you pick up a brush to start painting, the first time since you were an art major at SUNY-New Paltz. How did you prepare yourself to start painting again?

A: I learned to paint again by looking. I don't read about artists. I learn about them through their images. I take it all in like a sponge.

Q: What is it that you learn from looking at their

A: Take for example, Julian Merrow-Smith, an English artist who moved to Provence, France. There's a juiciness in his paint application, not too dissimilar to Sargent's work. (In his "Madam X," you know how dense the skin is.) You can look at a Merrow-Smith image, and it reads 75 degrees on a Wednesday afternoon in July. It's all in the details. It's about simplicity. James Margold is like that. Richard Serra, too.

Q: Any other American contemporary artist?

A: Eric Fischl. It's his subject and it's psychological, but it's the way he puts the paint down that I look at and learn from. I have to get the equation right.

Q: Regardless of how we each learn differently from a painting, you have had 30 years of research, so to speak, of looking. What's your goal now?

A: I don't need to learn anymore; I need to expand. I need to make better Keith Mantell paintings.

Q: How is your cover like that?

A: It's a note on what the day was like. I have a definite way of putting down the paint. You have to have a language.

Q: I know you have some definite ideas about the role art should play in our lives.

A: People should not be afraid to put their money in art. Art nourishes our lives. We should come home, drink a good glass of wine, enjoy a good meal and sit in front of a painting. Artists are here to enhance our life. Take advantage.

- Marion Wolberg Weiss

Rock The Harvest: A Real Concert, With Real People For A Real Cause

By David Lion Rattiner

Domestic violence on the East End is a very real issue. When physical abuse happens, sometimes it feels like there is no where to turn, but The Retreat is always there for East End women who suffer from this kind abuse, and the East End is a better place for it.

The employees who work there are dedicated to what they do, and when it comes to a benefit, there is no better of an organization to give to and support than The Retreat Domestic Violence Services.

That's why on Saturday, September 26 from noon to 6 p.m., you should make your way to Pindar Vineyards in Peconic on the North Fork and attend Rock the Harvest. Portions from this fun rock concert will benefit The Retreat Domestic Violence Services, and some extremely fun and awesome bands will be performing, all set in a gorgeous outdoor vineyard setting with plenty of wine and food to boot.

Big name Long Island bands are scheduled to perform, including Big Suga, The Kerry Kearney Band, Miles to Dayton, Big River Ransom, High and Mighty Brass Band and The Nancy Atlas Project. Tickets for adults are just $20 bucks and tickets for kids 12 to 20 years old are just $10. Kids under 12 are free.

To have a concert of this caliber on the East End at such an affordable price for the public to attend and for such a good cause is an answer to what a lot of people complain about around here. SOme might say, "Everything is out of whack. It's too expensive to go to a live show. I have to have some kind of connection or be a rich person to have a good time. I wish that some sense would get knocked into people to host a real event for real people that is at a high quality level."

Rock the Harvest is an answer to this problem. Tickets are not $80 to get in, you aren't going to be treated like you don't belong there unless you are a multimillionaire, and you aren't going to be supporting some non-local organization that was started as a non-profit for a celebrities daughter.

No, this is a very real issue that takes place in the place that which you live. Domestic violence knows no geographic location, no age and no class in society. It is one of those things that you can't ignore in your neighborhood. Go out there and see this concert and have a good time to support the organization that gives women who suffer from horrendous circumstances hope, options and help. You are going to be supporting real people, your neighbors in this community, who need your help right at home. This is a very real, terrifying and difficult issue.

Jeffrey Freidman, who is the executive director of The Retreat Domestic Violence Services expects the event to be a big success as sponsors and ticket sales are already happening so far in advance. In the past, the event has garnered support from thousands of people and has offered an injection of necessary dollars to finance keeping the lights on for the good people that help so many women in a seemingly impossible situation.

So help raise money for an important cause to a big issue that is in your backyard by attending Rock the Harvest Saturday, September 26 from noon to 6 p.m. You can buy tickets right now by visiting www.rocktheharvest.com or you can e-mail bigsugaproductions@gmail.com or you can call Pindar Vineyards at 631-734-6200. Pindar Vineyards is located at 37645 Main Road (Route 25) in Peconic. Tickets to the event are $20 for 21 and over (and includes a commemorative wine glass and one free glass of wine), $10 for ages 12 to 20 and free admission for children under 12. Food and beverages will be available for purchase, or guests can bring their own food to picnic, but no outside alcohol will be permitted. Hope to see you there!

We'll get you there.

Raving Beauty By Janet Flora

Flattering Lights

By Janet Flora

As the days are getting shorter and darker you may want to soften the highlights in your hair that have become too bright or light. The best way to do this, according to color guru Jim Clinton, at Vartali Salon (East 57th Street between Madison and Park,) is by adding lowlights. Lowlights (sometimes called twilights) are most often done with foils, like traditional highlights, except instead of lightening the hair, deeper shades of color are added for variation and dimension. "One of the great things about adding lowlights," said Clinton, "particularly at this time of year, is that you can do so without high-volume peroxide, which is the ingredient that is most harmful to your hair." This is a great way to camouflage some of the damage done by highlighting and the sun, while adding shine and color variation.

In the summer, highlighted hair will become lighter with any repeated exposure to the sun. Remember, you don't want to defeat the purpose of highlights — which is to avoid having hair that is a solid color. If your hair has been highlighted with shades of blonde and you're considering lowlights, Clinton suggests shades of caramel, light brown or honey. Depending on the base color of the hair, and what result the client wants, Clinton will lowlight with one shade or sometimes several different shades.

Clinton said, "Lowlights work best on layered hair and you don't need a lot of foils. You should be able to get great lowlights with 10 to 20 foils, depending on the thickness or your hair."

Clinton goes on to say, "A lot of problems are caused by over-foiling, and you may become an unintentional blonde. And after all, not everyone wants to be a blonde, and that may not be what you wanted when you started highlighting your hair." If your hair is being highlighted and there are too many foils used you will end up having dark roots in four weeks. By adding lowlights you can extend visits to your colorist. Adding lowlights in the fall should last you until the beginning of winter. Then, next time you return for color, you can add a combination of lowlights and highlights, placing some of the lighter strands around the face.

Back in February, Clinton shared his secret of highlighting layered hair by concentrating the foils on the underneath layers, so the light shades are visible when the hair moves. On layered hair, he does lowlights the same way. If hair is one length, however, you must do a bit more foiling on top of the hair to make the shading visible.

Clinton uses lowlights on many of his clients with white or gray hair. He said, "One of my clients with white hair wanted a change, but her husband liked her the way she was. The husband gave in, but made her promise she wouldn't come home a blonde." Lowlights are great for women who don't want to be blonde, but just turn back the clock to when they had salt and pepper hair. Clinton also explained that the texture of gray or white hair is not usually smooth and can be dull. By lowlighting with a dark color, you are adding shine and dimension. "This is a great alternative to a single process color over gray, which can be tricky. If the color used is dark, it can look artificial and harsh, and if it's too pale, it's really no color at all, but instead just dusty looking."

Think about it this way: With lowlights you're not really turning off the light, but instead manipulating it, so you are seen in only the most flattering shades

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

Wow, we are heading toward cooler weather and the stores are really doing it. They are showing off the Halloween costumes and decorations. Are you kidding? My impatiens plants are still in full bloom, and the trees are still green! Let's go shopping!

Hamptons International Market, 2 Red Creek Circle, Hampton Bays has authentic, very unique, high quality items, some you may be familiar with and some you've probably never seen before. There are at least 100 items that include a nice selection of designer purses, jewelry, collectibles, items for children as well as Fair Trade items. All items are handmade, one at a time, so the designs and colors will vary. Visit shop.hamptonsinternationalmarket.com.

Are you gearing up for some party times? Or do you just want to cover that BBQ grill and put it away until next year? At the Deli Counter Fine Foods, 623 Hampton Road, Southampton you will find an amazing weekly menu for dinner specials. New for the new season is "Dinner To Go @ Mosalino's." There are "Fall Dinner and Back-To-School Specials" and pizza that you can pick up after 3 p.m. because the deli is open until 7 p.m. Call 631-283-1774 for information.

A great way to welcome the fall season is to stop into Williams-Sonoma in the Bridgehampton Commons for new table linens, giving your dining table a fresh look. There is a new collection in all colors and sizes that include the Dijon colored rustic hemp hemstitch and grape scallop Boutis that are ideal for holiday entertaining. Look for fresh autumn wreaths, cookware, bakeware, cutlery, glass and barware, just to name a few.

Have you been to the new Citarella market on Montauk Highway, Bridgehampton, right next door to Dan's Papers yet? In one word: amazing! The store is filled to the rafters with every food shopping convenience you can imagine. You just can't stop filling up that shopping cart with fresh, delicious food that you can take to the beach picnic or pretend that you cooked for dinner!

After 10 years in Bridgehampton, Bittersweet Interiors, 2442 Main Street, is closing its doors within the next week. It is time to move on, "keep calm and carry on," which has been its mantra this past summer," Lois said, with a tear in her eye. "It has been a joy to be here and I'll miss you all. Please visit me at 1stdibs.com [under the name] bittersweet-interiors. Thanks for the memories. Keep calm and carry on."

Stop in and shop for the last time amongst the many beautiful authentic antiques and accessories. Call 631-537-5400 for information.

East Hampton's Whitmore's Tree Farm, Route 114, is having a 40% off all above ground plant material such as hydrangeas, evergreen screening, boxwoods, azaleas, rhododendrons, magnolias, lilacs, viburnums and so much more. They will

Hot off the Press: I found a great line of Eco Art handbags, totes, body bags, etc., which was conceived as a celebration of the Arts and the Environment by Rebecca Singer, fashion merchant, formerly of Saks Fifth Avenue, Lord & Taylor and Donna Karan. Her line takes the original work of American artists off the walls and screens it onto certified organic canvas using water-based dyes. I love, love the body bag that hangs across the body, a great travel accessory leaving your hands free to have that cup of coffee without wondering where your bag is. Eco Art handbags can still be found at Shoe-Inn in Westhampton Beach and East Hampton, Bridgehampton Pharmacy, D.J.Hart, Main Street, Sag Harbor, as well as on Amazon.com and at ecoartproductions.com.

Until next week, ciao and happy end of summer shopping.

Simple Art of Cooking Silvia Lehrer

Pear: The Perfect Match

At this time of the year, my mother prepared her traditional pear and plum "compote" for the Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur holidays. The recipe, of Sephardic origin, combined pears and seasonal Italian prune plums. We had a Seckel pear tree in our yard and Mom poached these petite pears, rich with spice and a touch of sweetness. The addition of the plums yielded a sweet red juice and a reddish tint to the caramelized pears. I have also successfully prepared the dish with fine-textured Bartlett pears.

Pears are a complex fruit. Unlike other fruits, they must be harvested when mature, but not ripe. If pears are left on the tree, they can turn gritty and mushy. To ripen pears, leave them in a bowl at room temperature and coddle them until they have reached your desired degree of ripeness. If necessary, place pears in a paper bag at room temperature with a ripe banana, which releases ethylene gas that quickens the ripening process. Raw slices of ripe pears are a real treat with a fine wedge of Roquefort and a bottle of Sauterne.

Early Red Bartletts or juicy Comice pears are my choice for Pere alla Corrado, a unique pear dessert from Italy. Ripe pear slices are marinated raw in white wine then covered with a sweet caramel sauce.

Here are two different takes on pears to welcome the fall harvest, the Jewish New Year and the sweetness of the season.

SWEET POACHED PEARS AND PLUMS

The first pears of the season, Seckel or Bartlett, are poached in sugar syrup with plums, yielding sweet red syrup.

Serves 8-10

8-10 Bartlett pears or 1 2/3 pound Seckel pears 5 cups water or enough to barely cover the fruit

- 1 cup sugar
- 4-5 whole cloves
- 2 tablespoons lemon juice
- 5-6 Italian prune plums or 3 red plums

Casaba or Persian melon, cut into sections for serving, optional

- 1. Select pears that are barely ripe and with stems attached, if possible. With a melon ball scoop remove the core at the base of each pear and discard, and then soak the pears for 10-15 minutes to leach out any impurities.
- 2. Prepare sugar syrup: Place water and sugar in a large stainless or enamel-over-iron saucepan. Stir to dissolve the sugar over medium-high heat and add the cloves and lemon juice. Cook at a brisk simmer for about 15 minutes, with cover ajar. Put the pears in the syrup with the plums and reduce heat to a simmer. Cook, with cover ajar, about 1 hour or until pears are tender. Plums will fall apart and impart a particular sweetness and reddish color to the syrup. With a slotted spoon, carefully transfer pears to a large bowl. Reduce liquid in pot until slightly thickened and caramelized and pours lazily from a spoon, about 10-12 minutes. Watch this procedure carefully or the sugars in the syrup can burn. Cool the syrup then pour over the pears. Refrigerate, covered, for up to a week.

3. When ready to serve, arrange pears on a platter and surround with slices of ripe melon, if desired.

PERE ALLA CORRADO

The simple technique of marinating uncooked fruit and wine with caramelized sugar is attributed to Corrado, an 18th-century cook in the Neapolitan court. Serves 8

2 pounds ripe Bosc or Comice pears 2 cups dry white wine

1. Peel the pears with a peeler then cut them lengthwise into quarters and eighths, depending on their size. Remove the cores and put the pieces in a large round, deep serving dish, to serve from later. Pour over the wine and let marinate for about 30 min-

1 cup granulated sugar

2-3 drops lemon juice

1/4 cup cold water

2. Place the sugar and water in a small enamel saucepan over medium heat and stir with a wooden spoon until sugar is completely dissolved. When the mixture starts to bubble, add the lemon juice to keep it from crystallizing. Cook slowly, allowing the thick syrup to melt into a smooth thinner one, until it turns a light brown color. At that moment, the sugar is ready and completely caramelized.

3. Pour the caramelized sugar over the pears marinating in the wine, starting from the center and moving outward in circles until the caramelized sugar is distributed over the entire surface.

4. Cover and refrigerate the pears for several hours or overnight. Serve at room temperature.

Hayground Farmer's Market Moves to Main Street

By Tiffany Razzano

After a successful first run at the Hayground School this summer, the Hayground Farmers Market will be extended into the fall, moving to the grounds of the Bridgehampton Historical Society, the historic Corwith Homestead. The farmers market will be open from 3 to 6:30 p.m. every Friday through October 30.

"I think it's a great idea to keep it open," said Michael Denslow, manager or the market who founded it with his wife, Emily Herrick. "I think it was pretty successful for a first season." Already, plans for next year are in the works and the market will likely be extended at BHHS again after school opens.

"I think it's a good idea to go into the fall season," said Peter Demeu, of Suhro Wines based in Mattituck. "It's a good time of year and people definitely appreciate local produce and products.'

This summer, the market rapidly grew in popularity as well as vendors frequenting it, from just a few farmers (including students from Hayground selling the produce they grew) to a roster of local farmers, producers and wineries, such as the Ludlows and the Falkowskis. Shoppers can also get pick local wines, cheeses and breads and other baked goods.

Though the first outing at BHHS was a washout due to tremendous rains that hit on September 11, Stacy Dermott, of BHHS, expects the market to comeback full swing this Friday. "It'll be much larger next week," she said. "We lost a lot of people to the rain. But I promised them it wouldn't rain next week.'

The collaboration between BHHS and the Hayground Farmers Market is in keeping with the Society's mission to preserve and celebrate local agricultural traditions. BHHS Executive Director Dr. John Eilertsen said, "We couldn't be more pleased to host this market. It provides a lifeline to our local farmers and a direct line to our long farming heritage here in Bridgehampton. Bridgehampton has long been the bread basket of the South Fork."

HEY! WHAT ABOUT US!

Dear Dan,

I'm baffled! Your article in the September 4 edition regarding WLIU's lease extension noted that there were only two independent radio stations on the East End - WLIU and WLNG and further stated that "of the dozen or so other radio station licenses on the East End, every one of them is owned by radio station chains...which have frequencies from other licenses in places like Connecticut Massachusetts..." and that "their focus is not only on the East End."

Hey Dan, Where've you been? WEHM, WBAZ and WBEA have been serving the East End community as your independently owned next-door neighbor for close to 20 years, with all signals originating from locations between East Hampton and Manorville. The stations are owned by Long Island Radio Broadcasting, LLC, and these are the ONLY stations owned by the company. I found this omission particularly surprising since you've visited our local studios and have chatted with our local talent...and in fact, Dan's Papers and Long Island Radio Broadcasting have advertised with each other in order to reach our shared local audience. One would think that with all your years in the business, you would check out the facts before going to print! I'm hoping that as one good neighbor to another, you would let your readers know about this misrepresentation, and that we can look forward to seeing corrected information in your next edition.

Dan, as a fan of quality radio, and as an advocate for the arts, I too hope that WLIU can find a way to stay on the air. But please don't let your passion get in the way of providing fact-based information.

Sorry for the omission. – DR

DETAILS, DETAILS

Dear Dan,

Just a note about some info in a current issue. The Samba Group never does posters or flyers. All information is personal between the players. The group plays, people come. Promotion is never done. The man never chased them.

Your article about the Parrish original design being 14 separate buildings is simply wrong. Going in and out is not the circulation path. All galleries were connected. See the published plans for this well scaled first design. The new design, in my view, is interesting, but hardly as contextual a statement about the east end its people, artist and spaces.

Harvey Bernstein Design Associates Inc. Sagaponack Via e-mail

Corrections always appreciated.

PUBLIC SERVICE

Dear Susan,

I wanted to let you know how much I've enjoyed reading your "Estate of Mind" column. It's very informative and very well-written — and a great service to both sellers and buyers on the East End. Great job.

As someone who has written about homes and real estates for magazines and national newspapers – and now as a licensed real estate salesperson with Prudential Douglas Elliman in Westhampton Beach – I've found your column to be especially timely and helpful. Thanks!

Aimee Fitzpatrick Martin Via e-mail

Susan Galardi does a great job. – DR

MAKES ME SICK

Dear Dan,

I've heard a number of people on TV yelling that the reason they're opposed to healthcare reform is that they don't want to pay for the care of people presently uninsured who might get sick. These screamers seem unaware that their own insurance is made possible because the large pool of people supposedly includes those who will never be sick, those who are presently well, but might get sick, and those who definitely require medical care. They do not seem to know that many insurance companies cut down on the numbers in their pools of people by canceling the policies of those who become ill and need expensive procedures. (Screamers might someday find themselves dropped from coverage for this reason). Of course, in the first place, insurance is not issued to people with pre-existing conditions. So, given the premiums the resulting pool of people pay, insurance companies rake in huge profits, despite whatever claims they cannot avoid honoring.

The public option these people oppose would actually save money. A large public pool of the insured would make possible some bargaining to lower the cost of drugs and medical services. The demand by drug and insurance companies for substantial profits, which now accounts for a large part of the cost to the American public of health and, of course, the cost of advertising and marketing health care would be vastly reduced, not to mention the amount saved when purveyors of health care products would no longer need to provide "financial incentives" to members of Congress and public officials to further their interests.

But, best of all, the public option would result in a much healthier United States.

Margaret Duggan Greenport, NY Via e-mail

Getting rational. - DR

PAINT IT BACK

Dear Dan.

Your response to my idea that the Town should paint old houses suggests I may have been too cavalier. I should have pointed out that my old farmhouse was in worse shape when I purchased it and that I had been restoring it, which is why I believe it's counterproductive and wasteful of taxpayer dollars to issue a violation.

Further, bad planning decisions in the design of surrounding subdivisions allowed a few people to profit at the expense of the old house. Therefore painting will not protect it. Actually, a better solution would be to move it to a location where I can justify continued personal investment.

In my opinion, excluding owners of old homes from the planning process are counterproductive. I believe you mentioned in several articles that you have studied architecture. Therefore, if so inclined, you could take the imitative to create a little task force made up of owners of old houses and planners to study the challenges involved in the preservation of old homes.

> There should be a Town group or historic homeowner group. Anyone interested? –DR

Police Blotter

Taking A Nap

A man in East Hampton decided that it would be a good idea to walk out into the middle of the street and lie down. Traffic became backed up, and it wasn't long before a police officer walked over to the man and told him to not lie down in traffic. The man got up and walked on. No arrests were made, but boy, oh boy, was that guy the subject of quite a few middle fingers.

Wow

A man who had too much to drink got in his car with intentions of driving in Westhampton Beach. The man turned the car on, looked to his left, looked to his right, checked his rearview mirror, put the car in reverse and then crashed into a patrol car who was parked behind him. The officer in the car got out and gave the man a field sobriety test and arrested him for DWI.

Two 16-year-olds decided that it would be fun to vandalize a house and car. They trespassed onto a Southampton estate after drinking and went swimming in the pool, then broke into the home to use a towel. They then grabbed some knives and cut scratches into a 2007 Bentley and a 2009 Mercedes that were parked in the driveway of the home. Afterwards, they hopped into the Bentley and crashed it into a dumpster, destroying the car, which is valued at around $100,000. I am not making any of this up. They then ran off. The homeowner called police after he saw his car destroyed and an investigation went underway. Police found the two teenagers, who were arrested. Doesn't sound like Mommy is gonna get them out of this one.

Stolen Doors

Two doors were ripped off a Jeep Wrangler in East Hampton. The doors, which are removable on Jeep Wranglers, are worth approximately $1,000.

Weapon

A man in Riverhead was arrested after he was pulled over and had a concealed unlicensed gun on him. The man did not tell the officers about the gun, which one officer noticed was slipped in the front of his pants.
